Meet the four courageous guests chosen for the 2021-2022 Guest At Your Table fundraising campaign.

1. Axel Fuentes is the director of Rural Community Workers Alliance (RCWA), a grassroots organization based in northern Missouri that supports the rights of immigrant and refugee workers in the meat processing industry.The meat industry got a lot of well-deserved negative press early on during the COVID-19 pandemic. For instance, you may remember the disturbing story about executives at an Iowa pork plant who had a betting pool about how many of their workers would contract the disease.These kinds of unjust conditions are something that long predates COVID and that Axel and RCWA have been working to combat for years.

2. Myra Dahgaypaw is a member of the Karen ethnic minority in Burma who works to support her community in the face of brutal repression. Ethnic minorities of Burma (also known as Myanmar) have long endured violence and discrimination at the hands of the Burmese military, including the 2017 genocide against the Rohingya Muslim minority, which forced more than 700,000 people to flee from their homes into neighboring Bangladesh. Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh still make up the world's largest refugee camp.

3. The Kioa Island Community Organization, or KICO, is supporting an island in Fiji to become more climate resilient Around the world, Indigenous communities are facing the harshest and earliest impacts of climate change. As a result of rising seas, melting permafrost, and other impacts of the climate crisis they did little to create, Indigenous communities are at risk of having to relocate from their ancestral homelands, where they have lived for between hundreds and thousands of years.Today we are highlighting UUSC's partner the Kioa Island Community Organization, or KICO, which is supporting an island in Fiji to become more climate resilient

4. Cristian Guzmán Merlo is a director of UUSC's partner Fundación Entre Mujeres (FEM). Because communities in rural Nicaragua are grappling with widespread violence against women as well as damaging farming practices promoted by multinational companies, which cause ecological damage and take over their traditional ways of life, she is working to combat both.
