The Learning Community series will continue to focus on Promoting Resilience using a Trauma-Informed Approach, highlighting evidence-based behavioral health programs. Hear about successful approaches to support the behavioral health needs of children and families with a focus upon rural communities.

Featured Speakers:

Kim Catanzano, Program Director, Project Permanence, Lincoln, West Oakland, will share the key components of its wraparound program, providing a team approach to serving youth in foster care.

Carly E. McCord, Ph.D., Director of Telebehavioral Health, Texas A&M Telehealth Counseling Clinic will share information on the Madison County Outreach and Services through Telehealth (MOST) Network.

Doty Shepard, Director, Resilient Colorado will describe a collective impact project in Durango County with a focus on suicide prevention.

Network with other professionals in your region to identify concrete actions to develop a behavioral health system that fosters resilient families, agencies and communities.
