I moved across the US for my first job in the news business 28 years ago and moved to several states since then as I made my way back to Michigan. I have been so incredibly proud of being a journalist over the years, proud to have been awarded for my work numerous times, proud to have been a part of changing laws, holding people accountable and telling people's stories that could help make a difference in the world . I was thrilled to have had once in a lifetime opportunities to meet presidents , actors and sports legends along the way and honored to be in the front row of history being made over and over.
I have worked with some of the most talented journalists in the world, many I call friends and mentors. I am also so proud to see the successes of many young journalists
I have helped and mentored over the years. As I reflect on my career. I have decided to step away from the television news business. I say a true heartfelt Thank you to those who helped me along the way. Most importantly, a thank you to my parents who have always supported me from the beginning . My wonderful husband who continues to support me daily and my daughters who were always so understanding on why their working news mom's life was never turned off, who sometimes missed events because of big news days or was late to games or practice pick ups because of breaking news. I am so blessed to have had this career but it is time for me to try something new. In April, I will be taking on a new role as Director of Marketing and Communications for the Detroit Health Department. (For my Detroit TV friends, We will still be talking I am sure! ❤️)
