A moment to remember – from grads to guardians of sight

We are thrilled to share a moment that captures not only our pride but our promise: a powerful photograph of us, the newest graduates of the university's Optometry Department, standing shoulder to shoulder with the very doctors who mentored, challenged, and inspired us throughout our journey.

This image is more than a group photo—it's a symbol of legacy and vision. In it, you'll see smiles carved from sleepless nights, resilience born of rigorous clinics, and a shared commitment to the global fight for better vision.

Our white coats are no longer symbols of learning, but of readiness. And as we step beyond the walls of academia, we do so with hearts aligned with the mission of VOSH: to bring vision to those who need it most.

To every volunteer, donor, and doctor who has carried this mission forward—you've not only helped heal eyes but shaped future optometrists like us. And now, we are eager to join your ranks, turning gratitude into action.

With this photo, we invite you to celebrate not just our upcoming graduation, but the continuation of a movement rooted in compassion, service, and global impact.

On behalf of our class, thank you for seeing the potential in us—now let's go change the world, one eye at a time.

Warm regards,
Angelina Mario Albandak
