DC Collaborative Programs

Arts and Humanities for Every Student and Professional Development

Arts and Humanities for Every Student (AHFES)

Through the Arts and Humanities for Every Student (AHFES) program, more than 60 of our 115 members offer opportunities for all students in the DC public education system to take full advantage of the vast cultural resources available throughout the greater DC region. Students attend high-quality arts and humanities events as an integral part of their education. Whether at cultural institutions or in-school, these stimulating programs entertain and inform students, while providing them with concrete, engaging learning experiences that bring standards and curriculum to life. Participating organizations supply teachers with preparatory materials, adding further incentive to integrate the arts into their daily lessons. This program continues to grow each year.

Professional Development (PD)

The DC Collaborative, in partnership with its members, offers Professional Development Workshops to DC public and public charter school teachers, which focus on dance, visual arts, humanities, theater and music and how best to integrate these disciplines into their teaching practices. In addition to Professional Development Workshops hosted by our cultural institutions and practitioner members, the DC Collaborative has hosted Professional Development Institutes which have consisted of day-long sessions focused on arts integration teaching techniques and cultural empathy/awareness. To see a full listing of upcoming Professional Development events, visit DCCollaborative.org/PDRegistration.

HISTORY

The DC Arts and Humanities Education Collaborative is a member service organization founded in 1998 by the DC Commission on the Arts and Humanities, The John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, and Humanities Council of Washington DC along with DC Public Schools and other local cultural institutions and funders. Today, members represent 120 cultural institutions and individual practitioners in the DC region, working together to advance equitable access to arts and humanities education in the District of Columbia.

The DC Collaborative has served more than 700,000 students in the DC public education system in all eight wards through its Arts and Humanities for Every Student legacy program, as well as thousands of educators through its Professional Development initiatives. In service to the greater DC arts and humanities education community, the DC Collaborative works through a Collective Impact strategic planning model and serves as the lead for the Any Given Child DC (AGC DC) initiative. AGC DC is developing a plan for expanded arts education in the DC public education system ensuring all children will explore, create and communicate through the arts to contribute to their development and the success of our city.
