The Table Tyke

Mothers of teething toddlers and babies rejoice! A mom of two in the Nashville, Tennessee area has invented and perfected a silicone placemat that does a job no other child placemat on the market was doing, by keeping tiny mouths off the edge of the table. Berlyn Haughton launched The Table Tyke for the most "mom" reason ever: she needed it and knew other moms would as well.

As everyone who has kids knows, when they are in the teething stage they put their mouths on everything. Parents nod their heads as they recall instances of putting their arm across a dinner table at home or in a restaurant to keep little ones from hitting their mouth on the table edge, not to mention gumming all the potential germs!

Innovative

The bumper is a major feature to the mat. It's made of BPA-free silicone so teething babies can chew on it instead of a grimy table edge. The bottom has a sticky grippy coating on it so it doesn't slide around.

Versatile

The Table Tyke is no one trick pony.. While conceived as a mat to take out to restaurants, it's a parenting tool with plenty of uses:

- It's a great way to contain messes and make cleanup quicker and easier
- The raised edges and bumper keep the spills on the mat and laps dry
- Can be used as a mat to contain messes during arts and craft activities

Table Tyke customers have shared on social media even more creative uses – from using it to make tortillas on, as a cutting board, and even a makeup mat for the adults to contain all the powders and gloss!

Portable

This product earns its spot in the diaper bag. When it's time to take to a restaurant, or an airplane or someplace fun like a theme park, it can be easily rolled up and taken along.

Sustainable

No need for wasteful paper placemats or wiping down every table's nook and cranny with wet wipes. The Table Tyke is reusable and super easy to clean - just shake off debris, rinse, and hang to dry or throw it in the dishwasher.
