

Program Description

Dia will entertain and enlighten in this fun day of learning about parenting in the wild, child development, and cultural attitudes — all through the lenses of lactation.

In the wild, the day the child weans is the day he/she walks away. Childhood and lactation are one-and-the-same. Everything the young need to know to travel the path from helplessness to self-sufficiency is learned while breastfeeding. By looking at mammal mothering, we learn about the role breastmilk plays in child development and gain an appreciation of early mother-infant attachment.

Does breastfeeding play a unique role in promoting literacy? Can breastfeeding help reduce the Word Gap and diminish the Achievement Gap?

How can we help kids see breastfeeding as normal in a culture where they rarely see it because moms wean early, moms nurse in private spaces, and baby dolls for kids all come with bottles? Can we increase breastfeeding rates down the road by helping young children understand that "Breast is Normal?" Can community members provide consistent messaging that promotes breastfeeding?

Don't miss out on this fun day to hear both the esoteric and substantial knowledge Dia has to share! Attendees will leave with new approaches to parenting and child development—with a keen sense of how special it is to be a mammal. Join us for this lively event that includes hands-on activities, audience participation, quizzes (with prizes!), and practical information to take back to your workplace.
