

It's Showtime!

I get to attend not one but two major outings in a span of just three weeks. The first exhibit is the JPCA (Japan Electronics Packaging and Circuits Association); this show is held at Tokyo Big Sight in Koto, Japan. I was able to attend this show five years ago and was impressed with the sheer size and the never ending hordes of attendees. There are plenty of booths to explore and lots of people to talk to which makes this a very interesting exhibit to visit.

Link to JPCA's website:

<http://www.jpcashow.com/show2018/index.html>

Just two weeks later the EIPC (European Institute for the PCB Community) Conference in Dusseldorf, Germany will take place. This year marks the 50th Anniversary of the EIPC so the pre-scheduled outing is sure to be a good one. We will be touring Unimicron's new multilayer factory in Geldern, Germany. I bet all of you PC guys out there are sorry to miss out on that! The EIPC conference is always well attended but I expect this one to be the largest since I've been involved. It is usually packed with two days of very informative developments concerning new technologies, and I don't expect anything different this year.

Link to EIPC's 50th Anniversary Conference website:

<http://www.eipc.org/eipcevent/2018-50-years-anniversary-conference/>

I realize there is not a lot of meat to this article, but just you wait until the next newsletter. I will give you a breakdown of these two outings I am about to embark upon. As with previous trips to these events, there is always something interesting to share. And who knows, I may even see you at one of these occasions. If you are attending make sure to let me know how things are going for you. I'll be getting back to you in a few months, keep up the good work!