

Seth Friedman, CEO, Passage Home, Raleigh, NC

As the new CEO of Passage Home, Seth Friedman brings more than 15 years of professional experience in the nonprofit sector working with communities, families and children who are faced with poverty-related challenges. His skill disciplines span fundraising, programming, fiscal and operations management and staff development.

Prior to joining Passage Home, Seth worked at the ACLU of North Carolina. Seth also held leadership positions at nonprofit organizations including the New Jersey Community Development Corporation, Vacamas Programs for Youth, InterExchange USA and Boys Town of New York. Friedman holds an Executive Master of Public Administration from Baruch College and a Bachelor of Science in Psychology from East Carolina University. Seth spends his spare time listening to terrible movie soundtracks with his wife Juliana and three kids.

Seth on his new position, “ My first few months as part of Wake County’s Community Action Agency have been eye-opening, both in terms of the scope of the poverty related issues our communities face and the amount of caring, dedicated individuals willing to help where and when they can. Passage Home has a great reputation in the community, built on the backs of staff that long pre-dated me. I look to continue and support their work the best ways I can and get out of the way of those already doing great things here. I hope to do the same for all of the other CAAs across the State.”
