MORNING TIME

Think of a time when your child obeyed without arguing. Write a note complimenting his or her obedience and drop it in their lunchbox or backpack.

DRIVE TIME

Watch this month's music video, "Trust and Obey," on either the Parent Cue app or Studio252.tv. Why is it easier to obey someone you know is for you?

MEAL TIME

Ask a kid: Do you think your parent was an obedient child or always getting in trouble? Why do you think that?

Ask a parent: What was the most creative consequence you received as a child for disobedience? Share the age-appropriate story that led to the consequence.

BED TIME

Read Genesis 6-8. Then, each of you name one time it was hard for you to obey. Pray together and ask God to give you the courage to obey even when other people don't.

PARENT TIME

Obedience: most parents' favorite Life App. We all like the idea of our kids obeying their authorities, but simply telling them to obey isn't always the most effective way to get them to do it. This month, we're talking with kids about why it's important to obey and how their authorities are really for them and want what's best for them. Sometimes kids may not understand why they're asked to do certain things, but we'll learn that obedience is about trusting the people in authority over you. Of course, blind obedience isn't always best. It's our job as parents to help kids understand how to respectfully question authority. Obedience is really less of a behavior concern and really more of a heart issue.
