The Challenge of a Public
Native Plant Garden
Wednesday, May 3, 7:00 PM
Main Library, Lecture Hall

The New York Botanical Garden's new Native Plant Garden opened in 2013. Designed by Oehme van Sweden, it includes a diversity of microclimates on 3.5 acres of varied terrain with a planting plan of almost 100,000 native trees, shrubs, wildflowers, ferns, and grasses. Michael Hagen, Curator of both the Native Plant Garden and the Rock Garden at NYBG, will explain how this garden is successfully maintained, and their criteria for what constitutes "native" in species selection and the use of cultivars.

Urban Gardening:
Growing Food in the City
Wednesday, May 10, 7:00 PM
Main Library, Lecture Hall

Even in the city you can grow your own fresh produce. During this lecture, the New England Wild Flower Society in partnership with the Cambridge Conservation Commission will discuss garden design and installation, crop planning, plant selection, and organic and ecologically responsible pest and disease management. Whether your goal is to transform your lawn into a vegetable garden or just grow a few herbs, you will learn the techniques for producing edibles in an urban space.

Education in Emergencies with Swissnex
Tuesday, May 9, 6:00 PM
Main Library, Lecture Hall

Education is repeatedly mentioned by refugees as a top protection priority. Some universities are now joining traditional humanitarian actors, to address the challenge of providing higher education. How does this shift impact the role of universities and their mission of promoting critical thinking, global citizenship, peace and tolerance? How can universities become humanitarians? Keynote presentation by Barbara Moser-Mercer from the University of Geneva's InZone Program.
