

CAPTURING THE FACES AND VOICES OF MANHATTAN'S NEIGHBORHOOD STOREFRONTS

“Capturing the Faces and Voices of Manhattan’s Neighborhood Storefronts” is a photography and oral history workshop of the cultural significance of mom-and-pop stores in the borough of Manhattan and the impact they have on the pulse, life, and texture of their communities. There will be two separate 2-session workshops held at the Neighborhood Preservation Center in the East Village culminating in an exhibition of each participant’s work at The Little Underground Gallery at the Jefferson Market Library in Greenwich Village from August 1 – October 1, 2018. The workshops teach how photography and oral history can be tools for public awareness and advocacy. Participants will learn to create their own powerful photographs of neighborhood storefronts as well as record oral histories with shop owners, which communicate artistically and are insightful and moving. Taught by acclaimed photographers and best-selling authors Karla Murray and James Murray. Space is limited to 35 participants per 2-session workshop (70 participants total).

The workshops are free but advance registration is required. Registration includes admission to both sessions of each workshop, which are spaced 1 month apart. Please register for ONLY one workshop on either Monday, April 16th or Monday, April 23rd. When you register for either date, you will be automatically registered to attend the second corresponding session.
