The Ethics of Microaggression & Cultivating Cultural Humility in Clinical Practice

Theresa Palmer, LCSW, LMFT
Clinical Assistant Professor, UNC-Chapel Hill

Microaggressions have been defined as brief everyday exchanges, often unintentional and automatic, that send negative messages to individuals because of their group membership (e.g., due to race, gender, sexual orientation, age, disability). The term microaggression is an emerging one in the helping professions and can be useful in understanding barriers to a well-intentioned clinician's ability to cultivate cultural humility as well as engage therapeutically with clients across a spectrum of differences. Throughout the various clinical codes of ethics, including the American Psychological Association's Ethical Principles and Code of Conduct, there is a universal mandate to provide culturally sensitive care to clients. Yet, when microaggressions are unknowingly committed by the helping professional, communication suffers and credibility is lost with the client, which impedes the therapeutic process and may lead to early termination of services. Clinicians are therefore ethically compelled to enhance their understanding of microaggressions, work to minimize their occurrence when interacting with clients, and cultivate a sense of cultural humility. Clinicians engage with a cross-section of society and therefore have a particular need to understand what microaggressions are, how they impact clients, and how they themselves have experienced or perpetuated microaggressions.

By the end of this Workshop, participants will be able to:

1. explain the term Microaggression and its application across a spectrum of differences (e.g., race, gender, sexual orientation);
2. classify specific sections in the American Psychological Association's Ethical Principles and Code of Conduct relevant to the importance of understanding and attending to microaggressions as well as the cultivation of cultural humility;
3. define at least three benefits of attending to microaggressions occurring in clinical practice; and
4. describe at least four strategies for cultivating cultural humility as well as responding when the clinician has engaged in a microaggression.

Instructional Level: Basic

Educational Format: Lecture, video clips, discussion

About the Presenter

M. Theresa Palmer, LCSW, LMFT is a Licensed Clinical Social Worker, Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist, and an Approved Supervisor by the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy. She is also a Clinical Assistant Professor for the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's School of Social Work. In addition, she provides clinical supervision to associate-licensed clinicians in social work, counseling, as well as marriage & family therapy. In teaching as well as providing therapy and supervision, she uses a systems-oriented, strengths-based perspective. She also has experienced the transformative power of attending to issues of privilege and power in these settings, particularly in the course she teaches to graduate students on Confronting Oppression and Institutional Discrimination.

Mapping Your Retirement: Applying the Psychology of Transition

Steven D. Mullinix, Ph.D.

Private Practice, HRC Behavioral Health & Psychiatry, PA - Chapel Hill and Raleigh, NC

Mareah C. Steketee, Ph.D.

Private Practice, HRC Behavioral Health & Psychiatry, PA - Chapel Hill and Raleigh, NC

This presentation will provide a conceptual overview of the psychological issues in retirement and will actively engage participants in thinking about this life transition for themselves. As a result of this workshop, participants will be able to identify concerns, anticipate changes that may occur in their lives because of their move to retirement and develop action steps to promote a successful retirement transition.

Secondly, the workshop will provide participants with information, concepts, and resources that will be helpful in discussing the retirement transition with clients and patients.

The workshop will involve lecture, individual assessment, and reflection, and small group exercises to actively engage participants in charting their next steps and tasks as they plan for retirement.

By the end of this Workshop, participants will be able to:

1. discuss how the concept of "retirement" developed;
2. identify what gives meaning to their life now and anticipate how that may change in the transition to retirement;
3. describe at least two possible "pathways" they might likely take in the retirement transition; and
4. write key next steps in their planning for retirement.

Instructional Level: Basic

Educational Format: Lecture, individual assessment and reflection, and group discussion

NOTE: This workshop uniquely lends itself to inviting spouses, partners, and significant others.

About the Presenters

Steve Mullinix, Ph.D. is a NC Licensed Psychologist and career development professional with HRC Behavioral Health and Psychiatry, PA, a 30-clinician group practice serving the Chapel Hill-Raleigh-Durham area of North Carolina. Mindfulness and Neuroscience: Everything You Wanted to Know About Brain Physiology But Were Afraid to Ask

Kristin L. Daley, Ph.D., CBSM
Private Practice, Charlotte

Mindfulness is an important therapeutic technique that has a growing following and a wide variety of clinical applications. This program is meant to be a professional course in the neuroscience behind the efficacy of mindfulness, rather than a basic introduction to mindfulness practice. The program will start with the neuroscience of mindfulness, drawing from both recent imaging studies and affective neuroscience text. We will cover the areas of the brain that are utilized in mindfulness approaches, and the changes that are expected with mindfulness practice.

Practical applications of mindfulness will be presented from two perspectives: general practice and specific clinical presentations. We will engage in mindfulness practice, and review engaging clients in mindfulness practice both in situ and as homework. We will cover expected treatment benefits, essential motivational strategies, and troubleshooting for client challenges.

By the end of the Workshop, participants will be able to:

1. describe the regions of the brain associated with emotional expression and stress response;
2. list the observable changes in neurophysiology associated with specific mindfulness practices;
3. connect specific approaches to mindfulness with specific psychological conditions; and
4. list some of the indications for adding mindfulness practice to psychological treatment.

Instructional Level: Intermediate

Educational Format: Lecture, Discussion

About the Presenter

Dr. Kristin Daley received her doctorate in health psychology from UNC-Charlotte. Her primary passion is working to support the World Health Organization's definition of health: emotional, physical, and social health, through several cognitive behavioral therapeutic approaches including ACT therapy and Dialectical Behavior Therapy (DBT). She started her career working in sleep medicine, continuing in the field while completing her masters and her doctorate. She is one of approximately 200 psychologists who have completed certification in behavioral sleep medicine, and is trained to work with sleep disorders across the age spectrum. Areas of particular passion include: sleep disorders (cognitive behavioral therapy for insomnia- CBT-I, medication tapers, behavioral interventions for pediatric sleep disorders), chronic or severe health conditions (e.g. chronic tinnitus, fibromyalgia, heart disease, cancer, neurological conditions), and psychological conditions that have strong behavioral or physical symptomology, such as anxiety, panic disorder, borderline personality disorder and depression. In her personal life, she is raising three rowdy kids and loves to run as much as she can.

The Health Information Exchange - Getting Ready to Connect

Alice Miller, Business and Outreach Specialist
NC Health Information Exchange Authority

Mark Dunnagan, SAS Institute - Invited

This workshop will present information crucial for any psychologists who works with patients covered by the State Health Plan, Health Choice or Medicaid. Information presented will inform the participants of the legal/legislative requirements and the deadlines through June of 2019 for psychologists and other behavioral health practitioners to be able to serve patients covered by any state-funded health plans. In addition, the value of connection and the requirements for connection will be presented and discussed.

By the end of this Workshop, participants will be able to:

1. describe the value of the Health Information Exchange for patients and practitioners;
2. describe what is needed to comply with North Carolina law to connect to the HIE;
3. list the guidelines for connectivity to be able to see State Health Plan, Health Choice and/or Medicaid patients; and
4. assess the various types of electronic health records that are able to connect to the HIE.

Instructional Level: Basic

Educational Format: Lecture with examples, PowerPoint and interactive discussion
