When an aging adult is moving to a smaller space or senior living community, downsizing may be difficult for them. Much of their “clutter” may hold sentimental value and downsizing may also mean that they are leaving their beloved home. In a recent study, 30% of people over 70 had not given away any items in the last year, even though the items were no longer useful to them. Extra clutter can also create fall and fire hazards. Learn how to overcome the challenges of downsizing at this free presentation. Light refreshments provided.
