The financial institution chooses which lanes/networks they want to put on the debit product.

Merchants choose from the available networks/lanes to send the transaction.

Merchants work with their acquirer/processor to determine the order of their network routing preference – this is called smart routing.

The law requires a minimum of two unaffiliated network/lane choices on every card.