RE: June 27, 2018 - UST Regulatory Review and A/B Operator Exam Preparation

New UST regulations, including certification of A/B operators, take effect October 2018. Are you and your customers, be they service stations, fleet owners, or regulated heating oil tank owners, prepared?

On June 27, 2018 FMA is sponsoring a review of the changes to the UST rules as well as a class that will help prepare you for the A/B operator exam. The seminar will be held at the Holiday Inn, 399 Monmouth Street, East Windsor, NJ. Registration is at 8:30am and the morning session begins at 9:00am. Lunch will be at Noon and the afternoon session begins at 1:00pm and will end at 4:00pm. If you are attending only one of the sessions, lunch is included in your registration.

The morning session will feature a review of the compliance requirements for regulated UST facilities which need to be met by October 2018. This includes the need for an operator training program, a facility inspection program and the testing of spill containment, piping containment sumps used for interstitial monitoring and the inspection of overfill prevention devices.

The afternoon session is designed for those individuals intending to take the NJDEP A/B Operator certification exam and will feature an in-depth review of the Federal UST Rule and the NJ UST rule. The review will include a comprehensive discussion of the various options allowed to meet the primary operating requirements for UST corrosion protection, spill containment, overfill prevention and release detection. The specific compliance points for the approved alternatives will also be covered. Knowledge of all of these elements is essential to pass the NJDEP A/B Operator certification exam. Individuals seeking NJDEP A/B Operator Certification are encouraged to attend the mandatory NJDEP training program before the June 27, 2018 program. As a reminder you must attend the NJDEP class before you can sit for the exam.
