

New Poll: Parents Prioritize Social and Emotional Issues as Top Priorities

A recent poll by the nonprofit Learning Heroes found that parents are especially concerned about happiness, peer pressure, safety, and other issues related to their social and emotional well-being.

Proportions saying they worry a lot or some about this aspect of raising their child

And when asked to choose, 60% say “being happy/not overly stressed” is more important than academics.

Note that the research says this is a false choice: social and emotional well-being contributes to academic success, among other benefits.

Which is more important to you in regarding your child?
