

Central Valley Angel Group invests in biotech company

- Mazen Animal Health Inc. gets funds
- “We recognize the promise that this company brings to animal science”

Central Valley Angel Group of Fresno has added Mazen Animal Health Inc. to its investment portfolio.

Mazen Animal Health is a biotech company focused on developing, manufacturing and commercializing novel biological vaccines and therapeutics that address complex or unsolved challenges in animal health and protein production.

The company says it is developing vaccines that can be dosed with feed for production animals or as a treat for pets.

“We recognize the promise that this company brings to animal science,” says Fund Chairman A. Emory Wishon. “We are ... very impressed with its management and growth opportunities.”

Mazen Animal Health CEO and founder, Jennifer Filbey says that it is “important to us to have investor groups who actively participate in our growth and success. CVAG has already demonstrated genuine interest and involvement. We look forward to a mutually beneficial relationship.”

Formed in September 2015, Central Valley Angel Group is a $1 million+ fund whose members are accredited investors. The Central Valley Angel Group invests in high-growth, early-stage companies that are located within the region. In addition to making a return on its investments, the goal is to educate local angel investors and create ongoing investment capital to help the Central Valley’s startup economy thereby retaining businesses and supporting job growth.

For more information:

<http://www.centralvalleyangels.com/>