The Good and the Bad News Regarding Domestic Violence Bills — What You Can Do

Here's the good news: After years of effort, this spring both the RI House and Senate passed out of Judiciary Committee a bill to keep guns out of the hands of people convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence crimes. This important bill to protect domestic violence survivors was at long last headed to the House and Senate floors for votes by the full membership.

Now the bad news: When House Speaker Mattiello and Senate President Ruggerio had a last minute dispute over the state budget, the General Assembly recessed this past spring without voting on the bill. It is crucially important for the General Assembly to vote on these bills when it reconvenes this fall to finish its 2017 work.

What you can do: Call the key legislators below and tell them, “Current RI law makes it too easy for dangerous domestic violence abusers, including those who are currently subject to protective orders, to access guns. Reconvene the full Senate and General Assembly right away so they can vote to pass House Bill 5510 and Senate Bill 405.”

Here's how to contact them:
