Gift Based Ministry

Gift (or Asset) based ministry shifts the focus from a traditional missional understanding that often asks "what do these (or those) people need." The emphasis in this traditional understanding is on a people or individual's need and the focus of the mission/ministry is on gathering resources to meet the identified need. In this "colonial" approach to mission and ministry we do ministry/mission to or for individuals and families in need.

Gift (or Asset) based ministry asks a very different set of questions. The question is what do we have? What are the talents, the abilities, the experiences and other resources already in place? How do we build relationships with people that call for the use of these gifts and abilities to build a ministry? Mission and ministry in this understanding is mission and ministry WITH others. The critical central component is that all mission and ministry is relationship based.

You do not need to be the perfect writer to share your story—that's what editors are for. Leave this workshop feeling confident to share your stories.

The 3-L Process (Loving- Learning- Living) – Conference and District Leadership plan

We all know that being a pastor or laity in the UMC means we will sit in meetings at some point in our service to God's church. Most of the time these meetings are at best brief, and decisive – but at worst, long and divisive. Regardless of their length or outcome, outside of a "nod to God" in an opening prayer, the meetings feel useless for spiritual growth individually or collectively. The L3 model can help change this. By incorporating a framework of Loving, Learning, and Leading, your church meetings can be timely, meaningful, and productive. In this session we will explore how you can use this framework in your context to begin to move your teams from boring meetings into exciting, spirit-filled interactions.
