What Is That Bouncing Noise I Hear?

For the last month or so, there has been a bouncing noise at Kare Youth League. It started slowly but is now getting louder. What is that noise? Professionals have come down to study it and have come to the conclusion that it really isn't that mysterious. You see, children are just bouncing the super balls and playground balls that they received for selling SoccerFest tickets. Only $25 gets you to the super ball level, and $100 gets you to the playground ball level. Now we can all go back to more important questions like, "Am I going to get a chili burger from Tommy's or a beef bowl from Panda at the SoccerFest?" So many tough decisions.

Where Are My Cookies?: Part One

Edited from Chicken Soup for the Soul

As I sat perched in the second-floor window of our brick schoolhouse that afternoon, my heart began to sink further with each passing car. This was a day I'd looked forward to for weeks: Miss Pace's fourth-grade, end-of-the-year party. Miss Pace had kept a running countdown on the blackboard all that week, and our class of nine-year-olds had bordered on insurrection by the time the much-anticipated "party Friday" had arrived.

I had happily volunteered my mother when Miss Pace requested cookie volunteers. Mom's chocolate chips reigned supreme on our block, and I knew they'd be a hit with my classmates. But two o'clock passed, and there was no sign of her. Most of the other mothers had already come and gone, dropping off their offerings of punch and crackers, chips, cupcakes and brownies. My mother was missing in action.

"Don't worry, Robbie, she'll be along soon," Miss Pace said as I gazed forlornly down at the street. I looked at the wall clock just in time to see its black minute hand shift to half-past.

Around me, the noisy party raged on, but I wouldn't budge from my window watch post. Miss Pace did her best to coax me away, but I stayed put, holding out hope that the familiar family car would round the corner, carrying my rightfully embarrassed mother with a tin of her famous cookies tucked under her arm.

The three o'clock bell soon jolted me from my thoughts. I grabbed my book bag from my desk and shuffled out the door. On the four-block walk to our house, I plotted my revenge. I would slam the front door upon entering, refuse to return her hug when she rushed over to me, and vow never to speak to her again.

The house was empty when I arrived and I looked for a note on the refrigerator that might explain my mother's absence, but found none. My chin quivered with a mixture of heartbreak and rage. For the first time in my life, my mother had let me down. I was lying face-down on my bed upstairs when I heard her come through the front door. (cont. next week)
