KARE YOUTH LEAGUE

INTERLEAGUER

COLUMN ONE

There will be a drawing for a soccer ball on the morning of Monday, May 22. Any stubs turned in on Saturday, May 20 will be eligible. There will be a winner at each Kare location.

Something New Coming Our Way

Last year at the SoccerFest it just seemed like something was missing. This year, that's all going to change. Hot Dog on a Stick is coming to the Rose Bowl. Those red, blue, and yellow stripes will make the food and game area a much happier place to be this year (it was actually pretty happy last year, too). Remember that everyone who sells $250 worth of tickets earns a "Foodie at the Fest" Pass ($20 worth of food vouchers to spend however you want). Also, everyone is required to sell their quota or make the difference up in cash. Hot diggity dog!

Where Are My Cookies?: Part 2

Edited from Chicken Soup for the Soul

For the first time in my life, my mother had let me down. I was lying face-down on my bed upstairs when I heard her come through the front door. "Robbie," she called out a bit urgently. "Where are you?"

I could then hear her darting frantically from room to room, wondering where I could be. I remained silent. In a moment, she mounted the steps – the sounds of her footsteps quickening as she ascended the staircase. When she entered my room and sat beside me on my bed, I didn't move but instead stared blackly into my pillow refusing to acknowledge her presence.

"I'm so sorry, honey," she said. "I forgot. I got busy and forgot; plain and simple."

I still didn't move. "Don't forgive her," I told myself. "She humiliated you. She forgot you. Make her pay."

Then my mother began to cry. "I'm so sorry," she sobbed softly. "I let you down. I let my little boy down." She sank down on the bed and began to weep like a little girl. I was dumbstruck. I had never seen my mother cry. To my understanding, mothers weren't supposed to. I wondered if this was how I looked to her when I cried.

I desperately tried to recall her own soothing words from times past when I'd skinned knees or stubbed toes, times when she knew just the right thing to say. But in that moment, words of profundity abandoned me like a worn-out shoe.

"It's okay, Mom," I stammered as I reached out and gently stroked her hair. "We didn't even need those cookies. There was plenty of stuff to eat. Don't cry. It's all right...really."

My words, as inadequate as they sounded to me, prompted my mother to sit up. She wiped her eyes, and a slight smile began to crease her tear-stained cheeks. I smiled back awkwardly, and she pulled me to her. We didn't say another word. We just held each other in a long, silent embrace. When we came to the point where I would usually pull away, I decided that, this time, I could hold on, perhaps, just a little bit longer.
