HALLOWEEN: SAFETY TIPS YOU'LL ACTUALLY USE

No Running – Children may feel the need to squeeze in as many houses as they can to maximize their candy load. Instead, tell them to keep it slow and steady not just for their safety, but for that of little ones too.

Stick to the Sidewalks – The streets are for cars, and the sidewalks are for people. If your kids must cross the road during their trick or treating journey, reiterate the importance of staying in the crosswalks and looking both ways.

Don't Step Inside – Although the event is fun and good-natured, the candy is still being handed out by strangers, and the kids should know never to enter those homes, even if invited.

Glow It Up – Glow sticks make kids easy to spot and can be dropped into Halloween buckets and bags for a little extra added light. Alternatively, go for glow bracelets or even a strip of reflector tape on the outside of a costume.

PEDESTRIANS SAFETY 101: WATCH WHERE YOU WALK!

Watch where you step – and where you cross! Washington, DC is one of the few cities that allows pedestrians to cross the street on a walk signal at the same time cars are turning left on a greenlight into the same crosswalk. Once you step off the street, crumbling or uneven sidewalks can cause pedestrians to trip or slip and fall. Be sure to watch where you're walking so this doesn't happen to you!

Another simple way to stay safe is to wear light clothing. In the dark, it may be hard for drivers to spot someone walking in dark clothing, so the lighter your gear, the better. So remember: take extra precautions in crosswalks, at night, and on the seemingly safe sidewalks, and your next outing should be injury free. If things don't go as planned? Call us. We can help!
