

Parent Partner Training “Building a Better Future” March 19,20,& 26, 2018

What is Building a Better Future?

Building a Better Future is a 3-day workshop designed to train Successfully Reunified Birth Parents to be mentors to Birth Parents who have children in out of home placement. Our main goal is to support and mentor parents who have children in foster care to; increase communication and appropriate self-advocacy with those involved in the Child Protective case, for increased child safety and decreased time in out-of-home placement.

The primary audience members for BABF workshops are:

- Those who are in training to become Parent Partners
- Those who are currently serving as Parent Partners
- Those who are involved in their local Parent Partner Program
- Adult youth or foster care alumni
- Frontline Workers/Assessment workers from DHS and other child/family serving agencies
- Supervisors and administrators from DHS and other child/family serving agencies
- Foster Parents - CASA workers
- Juvenile Court Attorneys
- Family Treatment Court providers
- Kinship Caregivers
- Community Partners and agencies that serve families and children

- Understand how a person's core beliefs impact his or her ability to advocate.
- Help participants to better assist parents in having effective meetings.

What is Building a Better Future?

Building a Better Future (BABF) is a 3 day workshop designed to familiarize those attending the workshop with a greater understanding of the child welfare process. It is also designed to provide participants with tools and skills to assist parents involved with the Department of Human Services' (DHS) child welfare system to move through the system more successfully. This course is not intended as a counseling program or as a replacement for other services.

The goal of the workshop is to engage participants in recognizing their own individual and family strengths, and to support them in recognizing the individual and family strengths of those families and children they will be assisting. Ultimately, Building a Better Future should help everyone who serves families and children to work with parents more effectively.

Why is this training necessary?

Even when parents are struggling to care for their children, being referred to DHS for child abuse catches most parents by surprise. And if the assessment results in their children being removed, many parents are forced to take a long hard look at what has been happening – sometimes for the first time. Parents are told that they must make major changes in their lives now or risk losing their parental rights. It may be a “wake-up call” or “hitting bottom.” Either way, it is extremely painful. To be good parents, mothers and fathers need to provide their children with food, clothes, a warm place to sleep, and the resources they need to be healthy and safe. But many parents lack the confidence and skills necessary to meet their own needs let alone those of their children. Teaching Parent Partners and others who work with families and children to appropriately advocate for families involved with DHS helps those families make positive changes for themselves on behalf of their children.

Guiding Principles

Building a Better Future is based on the belief that family is the foundation for all children, regardless of where they live. Children understand their past and move towards their future based on relationships and experiences with family members.

Building a Better Future promotes a strengths-based approach to working with parents. All parents have strengths no matter what challenges they face. It is the agency's job, in part, to help parents identify and build on those strengths.

In summary, Building a Better Future is a key strategy to improve practice with birth families, but it cannot stand-alone. Real practice reform must be led by committed, senior level leaders willing to make the policy, administrative, and resource allocation changes needed to ensure the success of this effort.
