OCTOBER IS BREAST CANCER AWARENESS MONTH: GET THE FACTS by Pat Williams

October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month. Since mammograms were introduced in the 1960s, the incidence of breast cancer has declined significantly. According to the National Breast Cancer Foundation, Inc., when breast cancer is detected early, the 5-year survival rate is almost 100%. If you are a woman over 40; have been previously diagnosed with breast or ovarian cancer; have a family member (mother, sister or daughter) who has been diagnosed with breast cancer; or have been tested for a gene mutation that is associated with a higher risk of breast cancer, you have an increased likelihood of developing the disease.

Who gets breast cancer?

- Excluding cancers of the skin, breast cancer is the most common cancer in U.S. women.
   The disease accounts for 29% of newly diagnosed cancers. Men are generally at low risk for developing breast cancer;
- Your chance of getting breast cancer increases with age. From 2008 to 2012, the median age at the time of breast cancer diagnosis was 61;
- Women living in the U.S. have a 12.3%, or a 1 in 8 lifetime risk of being diagnosed with breast cancer. According to the World Health Organization, worldwide incidence rates vary from 19.3 per 100,000 women in East Africa to 89.7 per 100,000 women in Western Europe. Survival rates also vary, from 80% or over in North America, Sweden and Japan to around 60% in middle-income countries and below 40% in low-income countries. The low survival rates in less developed countries are associated with the lack of early detection programs; and
- Breast cancer rates are higher in white women than black women, however black women have a higher incidence rate before age 45 and are more likely to die from breast cancer at any age. Asian/Pacific Islander women have the lowest incidence and death rates.

Early detection provides the greatest possibility of successful treatment. The following steps will help increase your chance of detecting cancer early:

Breast Self-Awareness. Becoming familiar with how your breasts normally look and feel will help you identify any changes in your breasts. If you find a lump or any other changes in your breasts, notify your health care professional immediately. Breast self-awareness should start at 18 years of age and be done on a regular basis. Changes to look for include:

- A lump or thickening in or near the breast or in the underarm area;
- A change in the size or shape of the breast;
- Dimpling or puckering in the skin of the breast;
- A nipple turned inward into the breast;
- Discharge from the nipple; or
- Scaly, red or swollen skin on the breast, nipple or areola.

Well-Woman Exam. At your annual physical, ask your doctor to perform a breast exam to check for abnormalities.

Mammogram. A mammogram is a safe way to detect cancerous tumors and other abnormal breast conditions. Mammograms can detect cancer or other problems before a lump becomes large enough to be detectable and provides an effective way to find breast cancer in its early stages when treatment is usually the most successful. The American Cancer Society recommends that breast cancer screening start at 40 years of age. Women age 45 to 54 should get mammograms every year and women over 55 should be screened every two years.

Ever heard that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure? At least one-third of all cancer cases are preventable. Taking the following steps will increase your chances of not getting cancer:

- Avoid excess weight gain;
- Get regular physical activity. Adults should get at least 2½ hours of moderate exercise or an hour and fifteen minutes of vigorous activity each week; and
- Choose foods and beverages that help achieve and maintain a healthy weight. Limit intake of high calorie foods and beverages.

The good news is that the chance that a women will die from breast cancer is 1 in 36 or around 3%. Breast cancer screening is the most important thing a woman can do to decrease her risk of getting the disease.

Did you know?

- About 40,450 women will die from breast cancer in the U.S. this year.
- There are currently more than 2.8 million breast cancer survivors in the United States, including women still being treated and those who have completed treatment.
- Death rates from breast cancer have been dropping since about 1989.

THE WORD ON YOUR FINANCIAL FUTURE

WILL THE ELECTION IMPACT MARKETS AND INVESTMENTS?

What drives the stock market? Quite often, it is fundamental factors such as the strength of the economy and its impact on corporate profits. At other times it is affected, at least in the short term, by external factors that can upend investor expectations and drive markets in a positive or negative direction.

One of the most obvious external factors that might come into play for markets this year is the upcoming presidential election. This is the kind of election year that has some built-in market uncertainty. It marks the end of the second term for President Barack Obama, which means that a new occupant will sit in the Oval Office in January 2017. Regardless of who wins, the leadership transition will likely result in some policy changes in the near future.

Dealing with uncertainty

This election season has been marked by unusual twists. In the Democratic Party, Hillary Clinton, a longtime party stalwart faced a surprisingly difficult challenge before earning the nomination for the chance to become the country first woman president. On the Republican side, Donald Trump, a celebrity newcomer to the party captured the nomination, overcoming a number of more experienced politicians.

Even without these twists, it isnot uncommon for the stock market to exhibit a degree of volatility in the run-up to an election, at least until the likely outcome is clearer. One of the key issues that could affect markets is the possibility that control of the White House could change to a different party. According to an analysis by the Ameriprise Investment Research Group, the potential for such a change tends to increase stock market volatility. This can be particularly true in the final weeks leading up to the election. Investors should be prepared for circumstances where the %oise+generated by the campaign contributes to market fluctuations.

Is history a guide?

Other data may provide clues as to what to expect in the markets. According to Standard & Poors, since 1900, U.S. stocks have declined by an average of 1.2 percent in the eighth year of a presidential term<sup>2</sup>. There are two points of caution with this statistic:

- There are a limited number of times when this circumstance has occurred.
- 2. The last time it happened, in 2008, we were in the midst of the Great Recession. The markets were down 41 percent that year, which dramatically changed the average return for this specific measurement.

What may be a more important consideration for investors than who is the new president is whether we enter the election and post-election season with a great deal of uncertainty about policy direction.

The impact on specific market sectors

Although its speculative to try and predict the outcome of the election and all of the policy implications each party would impose, the result of the election is likely to influence key industries. Among the sectors of the market that could be affected in different ways are:

- Healthcare . what is the future of the Affordable Care Act and the general direction of health insurance coverage in the U.S.?
- Energy . will production of fossil fuels continue to be encouraged or will greater emphasis be put on alternative energy sources?
- Security. how will the defense budget be affected given the increased focus on global security?

It's about more than the president

Its true that our president has tremendous influence in the direction our country takes. However, its important to remember that there are many others who play a role in making policy that can affect the investment environment. These include members of Congress (many who are also up for election this year), local and state legislators, Federal regulators and other officials. For example, the Federal Reserve controls monetary policy, which includes monitoring inflation and the Federal interest rates. Politicians have limited to no influence over policy decisions made by the Fed.

WILL THE ELECTION IMPACT MARKETS AND INVESTMENTS? (Continued from Page 3)

Also keep in mind that the presidential election doesnot have the same impact over U.S. markets as it once did. External events, many of which are overseas, increasingly affect the markets, and are often out of the control of elected officials. These events include natural disasters, terrorist attacks, financial crises and the financial results of publicly held companies.

What this means for your finances

While its natural to think about the impact of the election on your investments, its only one factor. Stay attuned to the bigger picture of your long-term goals. Review your portfolio diversification and risk tolerance with a financial advisor for an objective perspective on your financial situation.
