Richard W. Dow has been an interim pastor since 2010, now serving his fourth congregation, having guided the transition process in a variety of settings. Ordained in 1979, he has served in suburban and rural parishes in Illinois, Texas, and Florida and an inner city setting in Louisiana. With his seven years of interim ministry and an "unintentional interim" of 6 ½ years in one of his former calls, Richard has a real appreciation for what it means for congregations to be in transition.
