Sholosh Seudot “You Gotta be Kiddin’ Me” Halacha Discussion

As part of his training, a medical student was appointed to assist a doctor in a hospital during the night shift. The doctor was sorely overworked. He had been on duty for two days straight, with only short naps here and there to renew his strength. While the doctor rested, the student was sent to check on his patients.

The student noticed that the health of one patient had deteriorated. He hurried to wake up the Doctor to ask what to do, but the doctor was so tired that even when he woke up, the student suspected that his answers were not completely lucid. The student described the patient and his situation, and the doctor gave him instructions.

“Are you sure you know which patient I mean?” asked the student, and again described the issue.

“Yes, I understand you,” said the doctor. “I know which patient you mean and the orders I gave you are correct. Go do what I said.”

The student administered the treatment the doctor had ordered, but was shocked to see that the patient’s situation quickly worsened. He ran to wake up the doctor, but the patient died before he could get there. The doctor took one look at the patient and moaned in grief. “Is this the patient you meant?” he asked. “I was sure you were talking about someone else!”

The student staggered under the realization that he had taken the patient’s life with his own hands, all because of a misunderstanding. He then approached R’ Zilberstein to ask if he was indeed guilty of accidental murder, and if so, what he could do to atone for his sin.

What is the Answer? With Rabbi Rothman during Shalosh Seuda
