

Andrew Keating

Sales Support and Procurement Specialist

When Andrew was 10 years old he started IT consulting as a way to afford cartridges for his Nintendo 64. His father supported the idea and helped Andrew acquire his first clients by posting hand-drawn advertisements in the break room at the paper mill where he worked. Technology has remained a part of Andrew's life ever since. He has worked in telecommunications retail, managed services, and as technical support for numerous institutions in higher education.

As the Sales Support and Procurement Specialist Andrew's job is to craft and deliver the day-to-day operational purchases that clients request, master the tools that our teams rely on, and free up our Sales Engineer and Client Account Managers to architect new and exciting solutions. His outgoing and energetic personality perfectly compliment his ability to juggle so many responsibilities and his unfailing charisma make him a natural bridge builder across departments and between companies.

Like most of the Portland Internetworks crew, Andrew is more than just an IT geek. He brings a big personality and certain spark to our company culture that we couldn't do without. He jumps at any opportunity to decimate his coworkers at a game of Super Smash Bros.—a skill he acquired in the heydays of the N64. He also plays the violin, tennis, and dutifully works on his Warrior II posture when he's not cleaning, or watching Ms. Doubtfire and cleaning.

We are excited to finally have Andrew on our team. He has a strong work ethic and endless curiosity that's always seeking better ways to serve our customers. He also makes us smile every day.
