

Client-Focused by Design

By Riki Montgomery

After three generations of firm leadership and nearly 60 years of consistent innovation, Bora is still shaping the architectural landscape across the Pacific Northwest. In 2016 they were awarded Firm of the Year by the American Institute of Architects Northwest and Pacific Region – for their outstanding commitment to employee well-being, and to recognize that their pens have always been guided by a dedication to meaningful, sustainable, and client-focused design. Look no further than the Cosmopolitan Condominiums in the Pearl District or Oregon State University's Learning Innovation Center for elegant examples that encapsulate the breadth and depth of their expertise.

Last year, Portland Internetworks became Bora's strategic partner in IT. It wasn't enough to efficiently deploy their managed workstations or securely backup their critical data, we had to become a part of their creative process too. Understanding how they approach their work and engage with their tools was vital to ensuring their continued legacy as a leader in the architectural community. Bora knows that a well implemented IT solution, like good architecture, can introduce new possibilities, reduce friction, and lay the foundation for people, communities, and workplaces to grow.

Whether you're a visionary real estate developer or an inspired architecture student, Bora is always looking for people who want to find collaborative solutions to real-world challenges. Reach out to them at info@bora.co or find more examples of their work online.
