

Ultimate Parsha continued...

Being a new student in a school can be very difficult: meeting new teachers, learning new expectations, and adjusting to a different schedule. And certainly middle and high schools ages are when many of us also worried about standing out and being teased. Thankfully RMBA prioritizes the expectation of being neither a bully nor a bystander, so that new students do not have any additional worry about being picked on by peers.

May we all have the courage to stand up when we are bystanders to poor behavior.

Shabbat Shalom,

Paul S. Oberman

