Rightenant's Message

A few months ago, Benjamin asked me “What channels did you watch on YouTube when you were a kid, Mom?” He was utterly and totally shocked to learn that YouTube hadn’t been invented back when I was a kid. His question has gotten me thinking over the past months about how different my childhood was from Bethany and Benjamin’s. So, I have compiled a list of things that my children have never heard of or experienced:

- 1. Waterbeds. I remember visiting with my friend and playing on her parent’s waterbed and thinking that her mom and dad were so cool. However, I have to confess that I have always wondered – how on earth did you put bedsheets on those things?
- 2. Walking to school without a parent escort. From the time I was 5 and in grade 1, I walked to and from school (about 3 blocks) by myself and no one batted an eyelash about it. If you were to allow this now, you would probably be receiving a visit from CAS to discuss the safety of your children.
- 3. Smiling in your passport photo/driver’s license. Remember those days when you were actually allowed to show your teeth? When we got our passports 2 years ago, it took the Shopper’s Drug Mart staff over forty-five minutes to be able to take a picture that met the stringent requirements laid out by the federal government.
- 4. Riding a bike without a helmet. Now, I would be the first to say that I think helmets are awesome and I adamantly insist that Bethany & Benjamin always wear one when they are riding their bike or rollerblades. However, the truth of the matter is that it has only been in the last 15 years or so that helmets have become mandatory across the country.
- 5. Taking scissors (and other sharp objects) onto a plane. 5. Remember when flying was actually fun? When going to the airport was an adventure? Nowadays, with 1 hour security lineups and strict rules about what you can and can’t have in your carry on luggage, the ‘magic’ has definitely left air travel.

However, (having said all that), I think that it is only fair to list a few things that haven’t changed:

- 1. The allure of the summer campfire. My kids absolutely loved the campfires that we had at Family Camp and Officer’s Camp this summer. And, I have to say, not much has changed since I went to camp as a child. They still have the good oldies like “There ain’t no flies on us” (good way to lose your voice!) and “Father Abraham”; not to mention the huge slew of rounds that one can participate in.
- 2. The ‘coolness’ of the word cool. I said it as a kid and my children also say it. Some words just don’t go out of style.
- 3. Soaring through the air on a swing. When my kids go to a playground, one of the first things they go to are the swings. There is something truly awesome about feeling the wind blow past you as you swing up and down.
- 4. The song “Jesus Loves Me”. Despite how simple the words and tune are, the message of love and grace that it conveys makes it one of those timeless classics that is beloved by children now just as much as it was 50 years ago.

Thinking over your childhood, how have things changed or stayed the same compared with today’s generation?

‘Rightenant’ Mary Tim

Lieutenant's Corner

So, fall is officially upon us. School has begun and programs are operating at full force once again. However, while the calendar has moved past summer, my brain and body are taking a little longer to make the transition. The first week of school was pretty brutal. We all had gotten used to being able to gradually rouse ourselves from our slumber and slowly meander downstairs for breakfast. Having to keep an eagle eye on the clock in order to get the kids (and ourselves!) ready on time for the school bus was quite a jolt to our systems.

Ever notice how each stage of your life has a certain rhythm? Summer had a nice, slow, jazzy beat to it – just like Louis Armstrong playing ‘La Vie En Rose’. Autumn hits you like a drill sergeant yelling out “left...left...left, right, left”, forcing you into strict formation. Then, Christmas and kettle season swarms around you like a flash mob belting out a mixture of seasonal favourites ranging from “It’s the most wonderful time of the year” to “Jingle Bells”. Old Man Winter arrives next and starts singing “This is the song that never ends” for months and months and months. (last winter being the notable exception to this phenomenon!) Finally, Spring pops up, puts duct tape over Old Man Winter’s lips so that he can’t sing anymore, and then proceeds to belt out “Let’s get ready to rrrruummbbllle!”

Even my home country of Nigeria has different seasons – wet and dry. And, believe me, the wet } season is WET!! You ain’t seen rain till you’ve experienced a good Nigerian downpour! We need the different seasons and the corresponding rhythms that accompany them. Variety and change allow us to fully embrace and enjoy the various stages in our lives. Each season and ‘sound track’ provide us with a slightly different understanding into our world and our Lord. As we sit and bask in the bright, warm sun that summer offers, we can “hail [Jesus] as the sun above” and joyfully adore Him. When we see the leaves changing colour, we see evidence of “The splendor of the King, robed in majesty”. As we watch snow falling outside in the late evening, we can remember that “Silent night [and] Holy night” so many years ago when Jesus came into our world as a tiny infant. Lastly, a new spring flower can remind us that Jesus is “The lily of the valley, the bright and morning star.”

So, whatever stage or rhythm you are currently experiencing, I invite you to join in with the “Lord of the dance” and “dance, then wherever you may be.”

God bless you richly
Lieut. Sam.
