Children Together, Inc. is a non-profit, 501(c)(3), Alexandria based organization committed to increasing opportunities for young children with and without disabilities to participate in early childhood experiences together. For more information about Children Together contact our board president, Denise Forrest at dbforrest@fcps.edu or visit our website at www.children-together.org.

The Anne Lipnick Parent Support Fund offers increased opportunities for parents in our area to attend workshops and conferences that will provide them with the resources to meet the extraordinary challenges they face. Please contact Carol Keller at 703-671-3939 by April 7, 2017, for information on possible scholarship opportunities for parents.

Neurodevelopmental Science & Social-Emotional Development: Building Relationships at Home and in the Classroom

Focusing on birth to age 5, Dr. Tuckwiller will provide practical advice to optimize aspects of early social-emotional development, a critical foundation for healthy development. The session will focus on innovative ways in which to develop, implement, and sustain positive relationship-building in home and classroom environments. She will provide strategies to translate findings from attachment theory and the mutual regulation model into actionable approaches for parents, childcare workers, and early childhood teachers to optimize social-emotional development.

Dr. Beth Tuckwiller

Dr. Beth Tuckwiller is an Assistant Professor of Special Education and Disability Studies at the Graduate School of Education and Human Development at The George Washington University. She earned her Ph.D. in Special Education from the University of Virginia after earning a B.S. in Psychology and an M.S. in Counseling Psychology (licensure track). Dr. Tuckwiller's current research interests focus on psychological variables associated with teaching and learning, particularly those related to the socio-emotional components of caregiving relationships and classroom environments. She is an award-winning teacher and has been recognized as an engaging presenter, speaker and educator.
