

Social Services in Chicago: Get Connected

- ◆ Are you looking for better ways to get your learners the social service supports they need?
- ◆ Do you need help navigating the web of social service agencies that exist in our city?

As educators, we see that students' barriers to success are not just academic. They encompass hunger, housing, medical, mental health, and a range of other challenges. We believe that we can improve outcomes for students by using resources and principles from the world of social services.

At this training, discussion points will include:

- ◆ The main dimensions of social service supports (e.g. domestic violence, hunger, housing)
- ◆ An overview of CHA, HUD, DHS and DFSS, among other city, state and federal agencies
- ◆ The types of benefits students can receive as well as eligibility requirements
- ◆ Networking groups that exist for professionals in each domain
- ◆ How to intentionally partner with agencies that have services you need
- ◆ Sharing ideas about what has worked and what hasn't when trying to help our students

This program is designed for adult education teaching staff and other staff members at your agency.

Thurs. November 16, 2017
2:30 PM to 4:30 PM

Literacenter, 641 W. Lake, 2nd Fl.
Chicago, IL

Presented by Liz Brice, LSW, MSW. Liz Brice worked with refugee and immigrant students at Howard Area Community Center before moving into case management, and is dedicated to building bridges between learners and services. She understands the unique challenges that adult education students face and the program limitations of case managers and social services professionals. Liz is currently the Director of Supportive Housing and Daytime Programs at Northside Housing and Supportive Services.

Literacy Works' Peer Learning Series is an opportunity for teaching staff and other staff members to come together and share knowledge on a topic of particular relevance. A step beyond Special Topics tutor trainings, the Peer Learning Series lets us study one topic in depth, and use that new knowledge to make institutional change within our agencies.
