

MOTHER, DAUGHTER, TEACHER, BUSINESS OWNER AND BEAUTIFUL MESS MAKER.

For AshLee Winterrose teaching is written on her heart and synonymous with service and love.

Her journey wasn't an easy one. Teen age parents and chaos at home made her feel out of control. AshLee dropped out of school in 9th grade.

Even through her struggles, she was driven to be a superhero and make the world better for children. Teaching seemed natural, but the responsibility of that choice was heavy because she felt inadequate.

With the help of caring teachers and mentors at Southern Utah University, she realized teaching was more than a profession, it was her purpose. She found her passion, regained her confidence and after graduation began her career in the classroom.

Teaching and working extra jobs to make ends meet, she saw so many parents struggling to connect with their children in a meaningful way. She created Hide-A-Boo, an interactive toy company with teachables for parents to easily use.

The company has soared in revenue and, more importantly to AshLee, brought parents and children together to play and learn. She is now sharing her expertise, talent and heart through her ideas.

AshLee said, "I found my confidence at SUU. I found me."
