In June, Hamilton County Developmental Disabilities Services launched a community-wide conversation to explore the education of students with significant disabilities including the future of the two DDS-operated schools. Over the summer, HCDDS board members considered the feedback from the first two public conversations and engaged in an in-depth examination of the available trends and data. Because local school districts are unique stakeholders, we are seeking the insights and perspective of district personnel.

Join us on October 26 and contribute your voice in the next phase of conversation as we:

- ▶ Discuss local trends in educating students with significant disabilities
- ▶ Share important data about the history of the two DDS-operated schools
- ▶ Engage in a facilitated conversation about the implications of the data and trends
- ▶ Discuss your district's experiences, including what works to support students with significant disabilities
- ▶ Identify the constraints you face and the supports your district needs

Information from the session will be posted at hamiltondds.org/education

If you can't attend, you'll be able to see video from the session and submit your questions.
