Vol. XXVII No. 8

January Guest Speaker: Sherry Lynn Wood

Lecture: "Improvise"

Sherri began making quilts in 1989 and selling them at the local farmer's market in Carboro, NC. She sold her first quilt the second week out. Within the year she saw an exhibit on African-American Improvisational quilts which led her to begin improvising with patchwork and to her professional career as an artist. She is currently working in Oakland and spent the summer as an artist in residence at Recology in San Francisco. Her first book is The Improv Handbook for Modern Quilters: A Guide to Creating, Quilting and Living Courageously. If you want to discover your own creative voice, explore modern quilting or learn how to turn your quilting passion into a business, this is the meeting you won't want to miss.

NEXT MEETING:

President's Message – Quilting the Illusion

I haven't made a strictly traditional quilt for a long, long, time, probably 15 years, or so; but I just made two traditional quilts this last month. So, why now? Sheer stubbornness not to have an unfinished project around? Possibly, but I think there was another reason.

I think it's due to an unusually frustrating, emotionally distraught, annoying couple of months at my house. I find that when times get hard, when I hit that wall and can't quite get over it, if clutter I can't control is in my space, my creative brain won't work properly and the only thing I can do is put lots of pieces together perfectly to create the illusion that I am in control of my environment. It's a Zen thing.

The basic rules of quilting, I think (and this is my own, totally irrational theory, not based on any historical fact), were made by women on the prairies as a self-protection mechanism. A prairie woman could not control the Indians, or grass fires or locusts, and she couldn't even get clean on a regular basis. She could not access Weather Scan on the Internet, she couldn't call AAA when the wagon broke down, or Webvan to have groceries delivered. She was out there in a lonely wilderness, often completely helpless; therefore, she had to have something to cling to, something to give her the illusion that she had some control over her environment. I think that that when she could make 1/2" squares meet perfectly, diamonds and triangles with sharp little points, and quilt evenly 20 stitches to the inch, she felt in control of that quilt, and thus part of her life. Seriously, don't you think that's where the rules came from?

I do. I'm a contemporary art quilter. I don't do repetitive blocks, sashing, or traditional quilts anymore, but that's what I've been working on lately. Something about putting squares together in neat little rows helps me tolerate the mess in my bedroom while the workers are reconstructing the master bath. Something about cutting nice straight sashing and adding in corner squares distracts me from the emotional angst some family troubles are putting us all through. Something about making all those scrappy blocks flow together in color waves helps me ignore the chaos in the backyard where my husband's construction project has lain in bits and pieces, strewn with tools, for months. And let's not even talk about the falling-down fence (is the fence company really backed up for 5 months?), the half-stained deck, and the irritating tangle of computer & charger cords that inhabits the desk in the back office.

No, let me go into my sewing studio where I can cut and piece and reminisce about when my daughter was little and played with that doll blanket; about all of those friends whose names are on the nice, square, blocks; and keep sewing them in pretty patterns whose colors ebb and flow around me as I drink my tea, listen to country music and sew order and peace out of the chaos. I can retreat into my nice, little illusion that I am in control of my environment. It's my illusion, and I'm clinging to it.
