

Dear Mom,

There are two sides of my mom, there is a side where she is mean, doesn't care, sad. That would be the side where the alcohol is. The side where she is sober, there is a wonderful person, nice, caring, always thinking of others, funny. That is the mom I wanted to see all my life, but unfortunately I saw a lot of the other mean side of her. Every time she didn't answer my phone and I wanted to come over, I knew something was up. But, I went there anyways hoping to see my mom, if she had been drinking I would just go to my aunt's house for the night. I will always love my mom no matter what she is going through though. I will still visit her if she is drinking even though that might not be a good idea, I will always do it. I'm worried about her liver. I've heard too many stories about a liver failing because drinking too much. I just don't want that happening to my mom. Now that she is in recovery and has an ankle bracelet on, I hope she never starts drinking again, because she made everyone sad that was around her and trying to help her when she was drinking. All the family just wanted to see is you do better and they just wanted to see the woman that everyone loves. These are the reasons why I will never become an alcoholic I've seen too much of what it does to the people around you, how many lies there are told to your family, and also what it does to yourself.
