

Chief Mark Renkens Retiring

Chief Mark Renkens announced today that he will retire from the Palm Bay Police Department at the end of June, after having served the city for 27 1/2 years. Renkens' expected retirement date had been scheduled for December of this year but the Chief told his staff earlier today that he had been afforded an employment opportunity elsewhere that prompted him to move up his retirement date.

"After nearly three decades with Palm Bay the decision to leave early has been a tough one," said Renkens. "However, I am looking forward to what the future holds for me both personally and professionally."

Renkens has already begun working closely with Deputy Chief James Rogers who will act as the Interim Police Chief until a decision is made to determine the next Palm Bay Police Chief. Deputy Chief Rogers has 28 years of service with the Palm Bay Police, having served in Patrol, Criminal Investigations, Professional Standards, and Youth Services, among others. Rogers is a graduate of the F.B.I. National Academy and Southern Police Institute and holds a Bachelors of Science Degree in Criminal Justice Administration as well as a Masters Degree in Political Science.

When asked about Renkens' departure D.C. Rogers stated, "Chief Renkens will be missed. He is a true professional and has made a lasting impression on the city; we wish him the best in his future endeavors."
