Kenneth S. Grossbart is recognized as one of California's foremost authorities in his specialty field of construction law. He is frequently called upon by contractor and construction industry clients for representation in this complicated and ever-changing facet of construction and contracting law. His growing reputation for his expertise in this field has led to being frequently called upon to serve as an arbitrator in major construction-related disputes calling for leadership by a recognized authority in the field.

Ken Grossbart has been serving construction-related clients since his entrance into the legal profession in 1979, when he joined the firm then known as the Law Offices of Sam K. Abdulaziz. He eventually developed a partnership with Sam K. Abdulaziz, the Law Offices of Abdulaziz & Grossbart. His client base includes general contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, owners, developers, trade associations and exchanges. Ken works closely in construction law areas such as but not limited to litigation, arbitration, mechanic's lien claims, stop payment notice claims, payment and performance bond claims, construction defects claims, negligence cases, California Contractors' State License Board and licensing issues to include disciplinary disputes, accusation, citations and complaints, bid disputes, protest and mistakes as well as preparing documents such as contracts and other construction documents.

He has been active in and out of the office throughout his distinguished career, serving in a number of positions such as president of the Burbank Bar Association and as a member of the American Arbitration Association. He has garnered a number of honors for his professional and public service, including being named as a Judge Pro Tem by both the Los Angeles County Superior Court and the Los Angeles Municipal Court.

Kenneth Grossbart's expertise has been shared with contracting and construction industry firms throughout California through guest lectures, seminars and workshops on various aspects of construction law. He is also a frequent contributor to industry trade magazines, addressing specialty and general contractors alike, and he is a contributing writer to the firm's monthly publications. He also contributes and edits yearly updates to the firm's California Construction Law, a book developed by Sam Abdulaziz and sold through numerous trade associations.
