Hardwood Outlook 2017

2016 In Review

The year turned out better for the North American hardwood industry than we predicted. After strong 2014 and 2015 export shipments, we expected demand in 2016 would be slightly lower. However, export demand continued to grow, and through November, shipments were 11.1% higher than in 2015, with the yearly total now estimated to have reached a record of 1.7 billion board feet. China drove the vast majority of gains—and accounted for nearly 52% of all U.S. hardwood lumber exports—but shipments were also higher to Europe, Latin America and secondary Asian markets. U.S. housing markets finished the year close to our predictions, with high home prices and job market concerns slowing growth slightly in single-family new home starts, new home sales and existing home sales, though U.S. construction spending rose more than expected in November to its highest level in 10-1/2 years. Demand for unfinished, solid-strip flooring showed considerable improvements, especially in the second half of the year. Slowing demand for industrial products, including pallet cants, rail ties and crane mats, was a growing concern for sawmills.

2017 Outlook

The steadily improving economic outlook and the anticipation of a more business-friendly environment under the Trump Administration have bolstered optimism across the country and in the hardwood industry. According to the Consumer Confidence Index, consumer expectations rose to a 13-year high in December, while the National Federation of Independent Businesses (NFIB) says small business optimism hit a 12-year high, and saw the biggest one-month increase in 36 years. American manufacturing expanded in December at the fastest pace in two years, responding to the biggest pickup in orders since August 2009. The share of business owners who say now is a good time to expand is three times higher than the average during the current expansion, according to the NFIB, and more companies plan to increase investment and hiring.

Builder confidence in the market for newly-built single-family homes jumped seven points in December in the National Association of Home Builders/Wells Fargo Housing Market Index (HMI), to the highest reading since July 2005. A survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal predicts 1.3 million housing starts in 2017, below the 1.5 million new homes deemed necessary to truly close the gap between supply and demand. With the economy continuing to improve, however, and the potential for reduced regulations and taxes under the new Administration, housing markets could easily outperform expectations in 2017. Rising mortgage rates are a concern, but will still be low by historic standards and will have only marginal impacts on buyers. In fact, rising mortgage rates could well spur buying activity if buyers are concerned about long-term increases.

Hardwood lumber production will be steady to higher in 2017, at an estimated 11 billion board feet, with log costs and typical logging issues (labor and weather) potential constraints. Demand for flooring, millwork and cabinetry will expand at least at the 2016 pace. The markets for Red Oak and White Oak will continue to be strong, and demand for industrial boards and timbers will slowly improve with overall economic and business activity improvement. Rising oil prices and relaxed regulations should lead to more oil drilling and pipeline construction, which would help put a floor under low-grade lumber prices.

There May Be Headwinds

With so much of hardwood grade lumber sawn in the U.S. now moving to foreign markets, changes to world economies could certainly impact 2017 results, including potential trade disputes with Mexico and China, or escalating military conflicts. While the UK's plans to exit the European Union could also affect hardwood demand, there were no signs in 2016 that it did. Barring unforeseen global disruptions, the North American hardwood industry, with its abundant, sustainable and legally harvested forests, will continue to be the world's temperate hardwood supplier...and 2017 will be another good year for hardwood producers and sellers.
