We're training the new California workforce.

K-12 Adult Education opens the door to good-paying jobs for millions of Californians, giving them the opportunity to earn a high school diploma or the equivalent, prepare for vocational and technical jobs, attend college, learn English, take citizenship classes and gain the skills needed to move our economy forward.

But as demand for Adult Education increases, it's being squeezed by a lack of adequate funding, forcing increasingly deep cuts in student services for the communities we serve — immigrants, people in poverty, the homeless and inmates reintegrating into society.

Adult Education is working for California. Celebrate it. Don’t shortchange it.
