“The public sector needs to cut costs, do more with less, improve efficiency and increase the quality of services delivered to citizens.” We’ve been hearing this since 2010 and all Healthcare Trusts and Local Authorities are continuing to do this. However, simply cutting the budget and improving efficiency within individual organisations is not enough, there needs to be a more integrated approach to the delivery of services.

In line with the Health and Social Care Act, Public Health functions were transferred from the NHS to Local Government and since then we have begun to see a different landscape for how care is delivered. However, the path to a fully integrated care programme is not straight forward and we still have a long way to go, although there are some exemplar examples to learn from of which many will be talked about at this meeting.

The Excellence In Healthcare meeting will bring together senior leaders from both sectors to network with each other and discuss the current hot topics including:

- Business Intelligence as an enabler for transformation
- Clinician engagement within technology
- Local Government’s role in the delivery of STP’s
- Challenges with Electronic Patient Records
- How to identify areas where efficiency can be improved
- Estate rationalisation
- Internal and external collaboration
- What is standing in the way of an integrated Health and Social Care System?

During this meeting, all attendees will be able to share their own experiences and the challenges they are currently facing. In addition, you will then have the opportunity to look at different ways of addressing these problems and an overall look at where we were, where we are and what needs to be done to get to where we need to be.

Adrian Byrne

Director of Informatics

University Hospital Southampton

We live in a digital age, technology is now part of our everyday lives and accessing information through it is allowing the world we in to improve every day. Accessing our patient records should be equally simple, but there are still barriers which exist in making this a reality. University Hospital Southampton NHS Foundation Trust is one of the leaders in this space thanks to "My Medical Record" which allows users at home to input information into their own medical record.

Adrian Byrne lead on this project and will talk about how the business case was formed, what was learnt along the way and what the Trust is doing in order to continue building on this tremendous success.

The Role of Local Government in Sustainability and Transformation Plans

Dawn Baxendale

Chief Executive

Sustainability and Transformation Plans, everyone has one on paper, everyone has an idea of how it will work in practice but no one knows exactly how it will pan out in the real world. The concept itself is simple, getting multiple organisations who are involved in the delivery of Health and Social Care to work together. With the lead often being taken by the NHS and budgets being ever further squeezed how does Local Government fit into this and how can the relationship be a true partnership?

Hampshire has some fantastic examples of collaboration and Dawn Baxendale will give a unique viewpoint from Southampton City Council about how she feels the STP will enhance the delivery of care and what benefits can be gained by everyone involved.

Install a new piece of software and you're guaranteed to get a pop up asking if you're happy for the developer to capture data about the product in order to help them improve it. The public sector and in particular the NHS has the capability to do this and often does, but how do we turn that data into tangible improvements across the Trust?

Questions to be discussed include:

How do we implement the mechanisms to capture the necessary information?

How do we interpret this information?

What more can be done?

What's next?

Using Information to lead Operational and Clinical Change

To summarise the content will include how Croydon Health Services have used Business Intelligence of its services to deliver transformational change to the clinical models of care that the Trust provides.

Croydon, like many other organisations, was historically a “data rich and information poor” organisation, but is now very much on a journey to ensure that all information it provides is both useful and the driver for the transformational change in the first instance. What this means is that more and more, the Trust is using Business Intelligence to proactively identify opportunities and initiatives to be explored and effectiveness of the services that it already provides.

DATA STANDARDS and how they support INTEROPERABILITY and PATIENT SAFETY

The subject of standards implementation is frequently put in the 'too hard' basket especially with all the other competing priorities in relation to IT investment. It is important to understand the fundamental benefits realisation including patient safety, efficiencies and interoperability leading to data sharing and in this presentation I will seek to address some of those areas and hopefully encourage end users to move standards implementation up the priority list for developments and investment.
