"An Ethical Approach to Design and Architecture"

By: Stacy Walker, Milliken's Director of Customer Experience

The development of our concepts of right and wrong forms our ethical or moral frameworks throughout our lives. This framework, along with other external motivators, influences our feelings and informs our actions about a range of topics, including how we approach our jobs as architects and designers.

With "An Ethical Approach to Design and Architecture," we will consider a variety of ethical issues in our industry, the factors we take into consideration and ways to resolve potential dilemmas. Our discussion will explore the importance of sustainable design and architecture and the moral and ethical implications of our actions. We will ask if we are considering the greater good of communities at large and creating a better quality of life as we build, rehabilitate and change cities, towns and spaces with our actions.

Click HERE to Register by October 14th

Light Rail passes will be provided for those who can utilize them as transportation to and from the event. Please identify on your registration whether you need a pass or not, and we will coordinate getting them to you prior to the event.

AN ETHICAL APPROACH TO INTERIOR DESIGN AND ARCHITECTURE

This course reviews a variety of ethical issues in architecture and design, factors to take into consideration, and ways to resolve potential dilemmas.

During this course, participants will:

Discuss everyday ethical dilemmas and ways to address

Explore the importance of sustainable design and architecture, concerning materials, transportation and emissions, and energy consumption

Consider the moral and ethical implications of ensuring a building's integrity

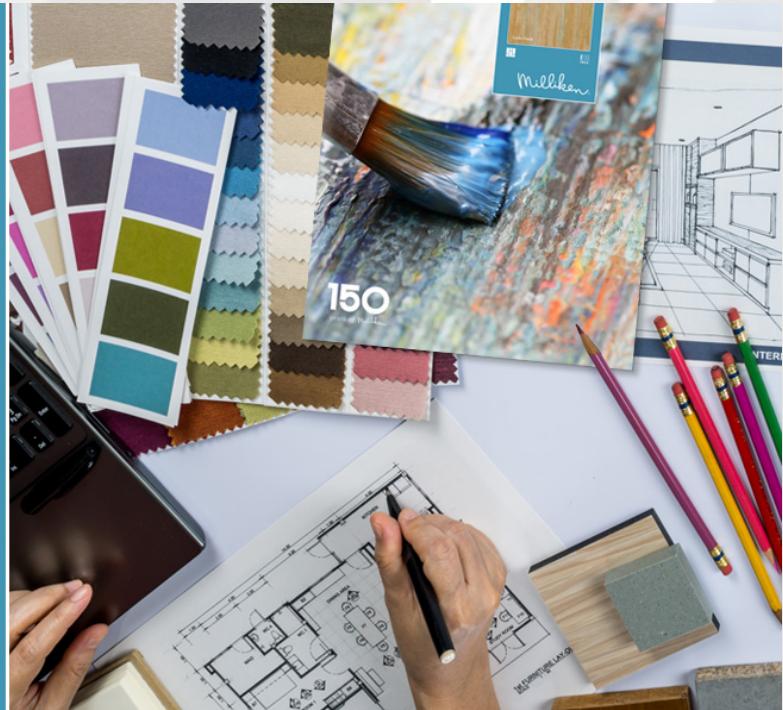

Examine ethical and moral concerns as they relate to design and architecture

Investigate the potential effect of various ethical issues on others

This CEU offers the following credits: 0.1 CEU/HSW, IDCEC; 1 LU/HSW, AIA
