TIF Reports: Changing the Rules
Clarity and consistency in the adjudication of North American racing is possible with a shift to the Category 1 philosophy

November 8, 2018
THE IDEA

Following the 2018 Saratoga race meeting, veteran Daily Racing Form (DRF) columnist Mike Watchmaker offered his assessment of the 40-day stand. Among his comments was a significant frustration regarding the adjudication of races.

“It is not hyperbole to suggest the inconsistency from the stewards at this Saratoga meet was among the worst ever seen. It’s not even a stretch to make that claim. It’s a valid position...Forget about the demonstrable evidence that what was a foul one day was not another day. No one knew from race to race what an actionable foul was. It felt like the goal-posts were always moving.”

Watchmaker offered several examples of the perceived inconsistency. His DRF colleague Mike Welsch took to Twitter on July 26 to opine on the stewards’ decisions from that day’s races. The original tweet garnered no fewer than 261 engagements, which included 179 likes.

“Hard to believe of the 3 races the Saratoga stewards were called upon to adjudicate today the last was the only number they took down. After calling the first 2 ‘as is’ there is no way that last winner could be disqualified. Has to be some measure of consistency.”

History is littered with the cries of athletes, fans, reporters and bettors who feel a sport’s officials made a “bad call.” But whether it is real or perceived, inconsistent officiating can be maddening and has the potential to erode confidence and impact future participation.

Horse racing is no different. The virulence of opinions regarding inconsistency in the officiating of racing, not just from Saratoga’s summer meet, but across the entire North American racing landscape for a considerable period, has prompted the Thoroughbred Idea Foundation to pursue the topic.

There is an alternative to the inconsistency, and with it comes far fewer inquiries, far fewer demotions. What racing would get is greater consistency, clarity and a betting sport where the participants – be them jockeys, trainers, owners or bettors – understand what fouls warrant demotions.

The philosophy applied in North America is identified by the International Federation of Horseracing Authorities (IFHA) as Category 2. Currently, only two major racing jurisdictions in the world adjudicate races using Category 2: the United States of America and Canada.

As this paper reveals, the Thoroughbred Idea Foundation recommends that North American racing jurisdictions move away from Category 2 and adopt a Category 1 interference philosophy. Per the IFHA definition, Category 2 jurisdictions are (emphasis added where underlined):

“Countries whose Rules provide that if the interferer is guilty of causing interference and such interference has affected the result of the race then the interferer is placed behind the sufferer irrespective of whether the sufferer would have finished in front of the interferer had the incident(s) not occurred.”

3 http://www.arcimodelrules.online/2017/10/05/interference-flat-racing/
In contrast, Category 1 jurisdictions are those where:

“If, in the opinion of the Staging Authority’s relevant judicial body, a horse or its rider causes interference and finishes in front of the horse interfered with but irrespective of the incident(s) the sufferer would not have finished ahead of the horse causing the interference, the judge’s placings will remain unaltered” 4.

Adopting Category 1 across North America would yield a sport with a greater understanding of how a race is adjudicated, far fewer instances in which the stewards are called upon to review a race, fewer demotions, comes with an enhanced penalty structure for jockeys guilty of careless riding and increased confidence for all stakeholders in the adjudication of the race.

Make no mistake, a shift from Category 2 to Category 1 will not eliminate the likelihood of a stewards’ review in instances of close finishes with possible interference.

The cases of Elate against Abel Tasman from the 2018 Personal Ensign (overruled) or Midnight Bisou against Monomoy Girl from the 2018 Cotillion (sustained) would still get close looks. Not all parties will necessarily be satisfied, or agree, with the final decisions. But, on balance, we believe racing in North America will offer a more consistent experience for all industry stakeholders when Category 1 is adopted.

Switching to Category 1 would be a confidence-building improvement to the sport.

The forthcoming details in this paper will outline the current state of race adjudication under the Category 2 philosophy, then compare it to the Category 1 experience. We will also reveal the changing rate of incidents within jurisdictions which have recently switched from Category 2 to Category 1, the history of North American rules changes and the far-reaching benefits of adopting Category 1.

Even if just a perception, an inconsistently-adjudicated sport serves as a blow to confidence for owners and horseplayers, frustrates racing fans and confuses jockeys, the race’s human participants who must perform within the rule structure.

Among the questions we consider in this paper:

- Why does officiating in North American racing leave stakeholders with impressions of inconsistency?
- What are the alternatives to the current methods of adjudicating the race and are they adoptable in North America?
- What do North American stewards think of Category 1?
- Using past examples of jurisdictions that have adopted Category 1, what could stakeholders expect from adopting the new philosophy?
- Would such alternatives bolster stakeholder confidence and yield a better sport for its participants?

TERMINOLOGY

For the purposes of more universal understanding, we will use a standard term throughout this paper – “reviewed incidents.” A reviewed incident refers to any occasion on which the stewards of any jurisdiction reviewed the footage of a race in consideration of a possible foul. A reviewed incident can be an inquiry, prompted by the stewards themselves, or an objection lodged by a jockey, trainer or owner, based on the jurisdiction.

4 https://www.ifhaonline.org/default.asp?section=Resources&story=992
Reviewed incidents do not include occasions where a foul was not under consideration, but a formal “inquiry” was lodged. For example, a horse that bobbed at the start and lost the jockey would not be considered a reviewed incident even though it prompted an inquiry, so long as no other horse was being considered as having caused the situation. A horse that may not have been afforded a fair start because of the role of a stalls handler / assistant starter would also not qualify as a “reviewed incident.”

When referring to a stewards’ decision where a horse was moved from its original finishing position and placed to some lower position, we will identify this as a “demotion” and not a “disqualification.”

The use of the word “demotion” is universally understood while “disqualification,” in many international jurisdictions, means placing a horse last following an egregious “win-at-any-cost” act by a jockey.

Again, this paper will refer to a horse being removed from its original position to a lower one as a “demotion” and not a “disqualification.”

CATEGORY 2 IN NORTH AMERICA

To understand the basic daily impact of current in-race adjudication in North America under Category 2, we reviewed the last full calendar year on two major American circuits – the New York Racing Association tracks (Aqueduct, Belmont and Saratoga) and southern California (Santa Anita, Los Alamitos Thoroughbred and Del Mar – identified in this paper as SoCal). All figures were derived from the publicly available reports published by the New York State Gaming Commission and the California Horse Racing Board.

In the following chart, take note of the numbers of reviewed incidents, demotions and the number of races within the circuit, yielding the percentage of races with reviewed incidents and demotions.

Nearly 3.5% of races in New York had a reviewed incident, while the occurrence in California was higher, at just shy of 5% of races. But significantly higher were the number of demotions in SoCal – something which occurred in nearly 2% of all races run while the NYRA tracks were approaching 1%.

The stewards in SoCal were far more active, demoting horses twice as often as the New York stewards, despite New York running 15% more races in 2017.

For the horseplayer wagering American dollars on American races via a legal, American wagering outlet, this disparity leaves an impression that a demotion in one jurisdiction might not be replicated in another, yielding an inconsistent experience and potentially eroding customer confidence.

Besides the fact that the stewards in each of the jurisdictions are different, it is worth noting the individual rules of New York and California are not identical. While both New York and California, and all North American jurisdictions currently operate under a Category 2 philosophy, the rules themselves have differing wording.
Here are rules the stewards in New York apply when considering a reviewed incident.\(^5\) Take note of the underlined portions of the excerpt.

§ 4035.2. Foul riding penalized.

(a) When clear, a horse may be taken to any part of the course provided that crossing or weaving in front of contenders may constitute interference or intimidation for which the offender may be disciplined.

(b) A horse crossing another may be disqualified, if in the judgment of the stewards, it interferes with, impedes or intimidates another horse, or the foul altered the finish of the race, regardless of whether the foul was accidental, willful, or the result of careless riding. The stewards may also take into consideration mitigating factors, such as whether the impeded horse was partly at fault or if the crossing was wholly caused by the fault of some other horse or jockey.

(c) If a horse or jockey jostles another horse, the aggressor may be disqualified, unless the impeded horse or jockey was partly in fault or the jostle was wholly caused by the fault of some other horse or jockey.

(d) A jockey shall not ride carelessly or willfully such that the jockey’s mount, equipment, or any item or object under his or her control interferes with, impedes, intimidates, or injures another horse or jockey in the race, including that a jockey shall not carelessly or willfully strike another horse or jockey or such other jockey’s equipment with his or her whip. The stewards may disqualify the horse ridden by the jockey who committed the foul if the foul was willful or careless or may have altered the finish of the race. The stewards may also take into consideration mitigating factors such as whether the impeded horse was partly at fault or if the foul was caused by the fault of some other horse or jockey.

§ 4039.20. Stewards determine extent of disqualification.

The stewards are vested with the power to determine the extent of disqualification in case of fouls. The stewards may place the offending horse behind such horses as, in the stewards’ judgment, the offending horse interfered with, or the stewards may place the offending horse last, and the stewards may disqualify the offending horse from participation in any part of the purse.

The rules in California are less verbose, but offer a very similar set of qualifications for the stewards to consider when a foul may have occurred.\(^6\) Once again, take note of the underlined section.

During the running of the race:

(a) A horse shall not interfere with any other horse. Interference is defined as bumping, impeding, forcing or floating in or out or otherwise causing any other horse to lose stride, ground, momentum or position.

(b) A horse which interferes with another as defined in subsection (a) may be disqualified and placed behind the horse so interfered with if, in the opinion of the Stewards, the horse interfered with was not at fault and due to the interference lost the opportunity for a better placing.

(c) Jockeys shall not ride carelessly, or willfully, so as to permit their mount to interfere with any other horse.

(d) Jockeys shall not strike or strike at another horse or jockey so as to impede, interfere with, intimidate, or injure.

(e) If a jockey rides in a manner contrary to this rule, the mount may be disqualified and the jockey may be suspended or otherwise disciplined by the Stewards.

Both states’ rules are clearly from the Category 2 philosophy. In New York, stewards are asked to determine if the incident “may have altered the finish of the race.” In California, stewards can demote a horse if they believe “the horse interfered with was not at fault and due to the interference lost the opportunity for a better placing.”

This language requires stewards to do a significant amount of interpreting. The more room for interpretation, the greater the chances of inconsistencies across groups of stewards from one local jurisdiction to another.

A May 2018 meeting of the California Horse Racing Board saw several stakeholders present complaints to the board in light of what they believed were inconsistent decisions from the stewards at Santa Anita.

“From a horseplayer’s perspective,” said gambler and horse owner Leo Vukmanovich, “what we’re looking for is just an objective decision and a consistent outcome.”

Longtime industry professional and horseplayer Bob Ike took it one step farther.

“I’ve been in the game for 33 years. To me, that means I’ve watched about 60,000 races live, and probably triple that when you count the replays that I go back and watch. And I’ve probably gambled, of those 33 years, about 95 percent of the racing days here in Southern California. I don’t bet other circuits. I just play Southern California.

But as of May 6th, the eighth race that day, I’ve stopped gambling on Southern California races, and I’ll continue to do so until I believe that there is better and more consistent officiating. I might bet on other circuits or I might not bet at all, but I just cannot play Southern California anymore with the kind of consistent inconsistency that I think I’ve seen from the stewards. And I think I speak for a lot of other horse players also.”

Later in the meeting, Tim Ritvo, Chief Operating Officer of Santa Anita’s parent company, The Stronach Group, offered his take.

“I’m glad you [the CHRB] are looking at this very seriously, and I’m glad that customers of ours have come up and spoke because they’re the economic engine of the sport. If they don’t have a fair shot or feel that they were misrepresented in a way, we’re going to lose a lot of business.”

Madeline Auerbach, vice-chairman of the CHRB, summarized the issue in these remarks:

“...If you look at stewards’ decisions all over the country and the way racing is conducted, there is always a level of...”

unhappiness. And even though this is beyond the level of unhappiness, I do want to point out that it’s not -- no matter what we do, it won’t be perfect...And we hear you; consistency, and something that we can count on, is what we’re all looking for.”

Focusing solely on whether or not the suffering horse would have finished in front of the interfering horse, Category 1 brings a greater opportunity for consistency.

When discussing the state of decision-making in American races, DRF industry reporter Matt Hegarty offered the following assessment in 2015.8

“So, in sum, when talking about the inquiry process, you have imperfect humans using imperfect criteria to make imperfect decisions subject to criticism from imperfect observers. It’s not a recipe for consistency.”

MAJOR CATEGORY 2 FLAWS

Among the primary flaws with the Category 2 philosophy, clear-cut winners can be demoted for interference which had minimal impact on the race – penalizing the jockey, owners, trainers, bettors, and in some cases, even the racetrack itself.

Now imagine the application of Category 2 rules in a Kentucky Derby or Breeders’ Cup Classic. A winner that rolls clear only to lose the race in the stewards’ room. The outcry would be deafening.

There are plenty of examples of prestigious North American races where “controversial” demotions of clear winners received significant coverage.

Secret Gesture, a 1 ¾-length winner, was demoted from first to third in the 2015 Beverly D when her shifting ground led to a check from Stephanie’s Kitten, who was then caught for second by Watsdachances.9

Powerscourt went on to a 1 ½-length win in the 2004 Arlington Million from Kicken Kris, himself a length clear of the third placer, but was demoted behind Kicken Kris after shifting in.10 Jockey Kent Desormeaux, who rode Kicken Kris, even flagged his whip, celebrating after the race as he was certain he would be promoted by the stewards due to the interference of a horse who was, otherwise, easily the best on the day.

Alphabet Soup was three lengths clear of third placer Dare N’ Go in a four-horse renewal of the 1996 Goodwood Breeders’ Cup Handicap at Santa Anita, but demoted behind that rival after shifting in and causing Dare N Go to check...one mile from the finish.11

The Wicked North won the 1994 Santa Anita Handicap by 1 ½ lengths before being demoted to fourth behind Myrakalu, who finished 2 ¾ lengths behind him at the finish. The stewards found that a top-of-the-stretch pinch of Myrakalu was caused by The Wicked North, costing that horse a better placing after Bien Bien caught him for third in the final stages of the race.12

Three recent incidents across North America within a week brought the drawback to the existing Category 2 philosophy into focus, where clear, basically eased-down winners were demoted following earlier interference. The races in question all involved two-year-old maidens:

Woodbine, Race 2, September 16
Remington Park, Race 6, September 20

In the race at Laurel, Passcode broke from gate seven and angled across the field, causing Follow The Dog to steady on the backstretch. Passcode was never challenged and won by 3 ¾ lengths, but was demoted to second behind Follow The Dog. Passcode returned a 2 ½ length winner in her subsequent start as the 6-5 favorite.

At Woodbine, first-time starter She Calls It ran off to a 6 ¼-length win under jockey Jesse Campbell, but caused two horses to steady in the vicinity of the quarter pole when commencing a rally. The filly was eased down in a super impressive win, but demoted to fifth for the interference.

“I knew they were going to take me down as soon as I got back and told the trainer so,” said Campbell, a 24-year journeyman with more than 2,200 wins from nearly 18,000 mounts, when asked about the ride by the Thoroughbred Idea Foundation.

“We had three horses in front of us and I knew two of them didn’t have much horse. I asked my filly to engage going into the turn and close, but I didn’t get much response. Then she put it all together and just took off, and I realized then that this first time starter was going to have to make a veteran move, and sure, that’s my fault.

“The shame is, so many different people lose because of these rules the way they are here and all over North America. I lose, the owners lose, the trainer, the bettors. She was so very much the best. It’s a shame.”

She Calls It returned a 2 ¼-length winner in her next start when, somewhat remarkably, she was only the 5-2 second choice in a field of 12.

Another first-time starter, Eskendar pinched some space from fellow debuter Street Conscious at Remington near the half-mile pole in this six-furlong race. Eskendar went on to win by five lengths but was demoted to second behind the aggrieved horse.

Despite still being eligible for maiden company, Eskendar returned in a listed stakes race at Delta Downs and finished second as the 5-2 second choice. The filly who was the adjudged winner at Remington, Street Conscious, finished 22 lengths sixth behind her in the same race.

These three horses “won” by a combined 15 lengths and all were demoted for fouls occurring no less than a quarter mile from the finish. With these rulings, the stewards believed the suffering horses were denied a better finishing position or the interference in some way may have altered the final results of the race.

Under the Category 1 philosophy, none of these seven examples – the three maiden races in 2018, nor the four Grade 1 races over the last 25 years, would have seen a change in the order of finish. The winners were too good, their margins of victory too significant. Relative to the rule, there was no evidence that had the interference not occurred, the horses that suffered interference would have finished in front of the interfering horses.

The best horses won, the placings would have remained unchanged, seven winners would not have been demoted.
The Category 1 rules are distinctly written to benefit the “best horse.” Racing should want to promote a sport where the best horse wins. The Category 1 philosophy aims to ensure that standard. In these cases above, the best horse was denied a clear win by the stewards’ decisions, penalizing far more stakeholders than would be the case in Category 1.

The bettors, who successfully backed a clear winner, lost. The owners, trainers and jockeys lost. The next time each of the demoted maiden winners returns in a maiden race, despite having won clear in their previous attempts, the host racetrack might find themselves with an uncompetitive betting race and a short favorite. The consequences of a single jockey’s action, or a horse’s uncontrolled shifting, reach deeper in North America than anywhere else in the racing world.

In races with much closer finishes, stewards in Category 1 jurisdictions won’t hesitate in hoisting the inquiry sign if needed, but the burden of proof is significantly tougher. The 2018 Cotillion15 (Monomoy Girl v Midnight Bisou) would surely “get a look” regardless of the rules philosophy in place, the 2017 Los Alamitos Futurity16 (Solomini v McKinzie v Instilled Regard) and 2018 Personal Ensign17 (Abel Tasman v Elate) likely as well.

Bayern’s win in the 2014 Breeders’ Cup Classic is often referenced in these debates, having impeded both Shared Belief and a likely pace presence, Moreno, coming out of the starting gate.18 The margin at the finish between Bayern and Shared Belief was 3 ¾ lengths, which likely would not warrant an inquiry in Category 1, but rather be the focus of a penalty review for the jockey, particularly considering the caliber of race.

Consecutive races at Gulfstream Park in 2015, including the Grade 2 Fountain of Youth Stakes, garnered much criticism after the stakes winner Upstart was demoted from first to second after a nearly three-length win,19 while a similar incident one race later, where the margin of victory was a neck, was left unchanged.20 The DRF covered the perceived inconsistency.

“While many disqualifications are cut and dried and little remarked on, the Florida decisions on Fountain of Youth Day seemed to draw comment from nearly every quarter of the industry. Most pointed out that while Upstart, the 4-5 favorite, was disqualified in the Fountain of Youth for what appeared to be minor contact in the stretch with a rival, the stewards upheld the finish in the very next race despite what appeared to be a very similar incident.

According to the chart, the last-race winner, the 12-1 shot Danish Dynaformer, ‘bumped repeatedly’ in the final furlong of the race with the favorite, Dreaming of Gold, yet the result stood after an inquiry.

To Jerry Bailey, the Hall of Fame jockey and television commentator who was watching from home on the day of the Fountain of Youth, the Gulfstream stewards made a “horrible call.” But he couldn’t say which call was the horrible one.

‘If you leave one up, the other has to stay up,’ Bailey said. ‘If you take one down, the other has to come down. It’s as simple as that. The biggest issue as a rider is that you want consistency. If riders don’t have that, if you don’t know what the stewards are looking for, you get frustrated.”

Without question, all of these races played host to some sort of infraction on the part of the jockey, by which they should suffer some punishment. But the current Category 2 methods, permitting a high rate of demotions, but requiring a significant degree of interpretation, extends both the frustrating inconsistencies and the punishment of demotions to far more stakeholders.

In the NYRA and SoCal races from 2017 which saw a combined 55 demotions, no less than $2.12 million in prize money and wagers were redistributed as a result of those decisions. The totals across North America put the total figure much higher, estimated by TIF at more than $10 million annually. Under Category 1, significantly less would have been redistributed as demotions would have declined.

On balance, is the Category 2 philosophy fairer to more stakeholders than Category 1? We believe not.

The Category 1 Alternative

As mentioned, North America remains the sole spot in the world of racing to retain the Category 2 philosophy. The rest of the world has changed over to Category 1, albeit with varying speeds.

Among the most notable jurisdictions to change in recent years is Japan – where the top flight races of the Japan Racing Association, numbering more than 3,400 per year, are now governed by Category 1 since changing to this philosophy in 2013.

The change was prompted, unfortunately, by a demotion in one of Japan’s most esteemed races, the 2010 Japan Cup, in which betting and fan favorite Buena Vista, a clear two-length winner past the post, was demoted and placed second because, in the opinion of the stewards, her shifting-in caused Rose Kingdom the opportunity for a better placing.

Kim Kelly, chairman of the IFHA’s International Harmonization of Raceday Rules Committee, offered the following sentiments at October’s IFHA General Assembly:

“The demotion of Buena Vista caused considerable consternation both within Japan and internationally as the horse which was overwhelmingly the best on the day was placed behind a horse which was demonstrably inferior. Even the trainer of the horse which was elevated to the winner of the race was quoted as saying that he had ‘mixed feelings’ about the result.

The silver lining to what clearly was a less-than-ideal race outcome was that the Japan Racing Association reacted positively to the international comment on the result by seeking the assistance of the Harmonization Committee in changing to the Category 1 philosophy. It is indisputable that had Category 1 been in operation in Japan in 2010 then Buena Vista would have rightfully retained the race.

The decision of the Japan Racing Association to change to Category 1 was a brave one for which they deserve tremendous credit. To recognize that change was necessary and in the best interests of the sport, and to completely change a racing interference culture dating back decades was a significant moment for the JRA.”

North American racing, and its current raceday stewards, are sitting on a ticking time bomb of negative publicity and shattered confidence, set to explode when a major race winner, well clear, is demoted as a result of the Category 2 rules in place.

It is necessary to note that we believe the stewards would not be at fault for this. They are merely interpreting the rules as provided. The rules philosophy needs to change.

Take note of the figures below, provided by the JRA to the IFHA for use at its 2018 International Conference, relative to the number of inquiries and demotions in the years before the switch (orange) and subsequent years since Category 1 was adopted (dark blue).

A bar graph of the data is also provided, exhibiting the dramatic differences from 2010-2012 under Category 2 and then the subsequent years after the Category 1 adoption.

In the first five full years since enacting Category 1, JRA races have been subject to a stewards’ inquiry on 85 occasions, or roughly 59% the number of inquiries held just in 2012 alone, the last year of Category 2. The number of demotions in those five years is still less than the total for 2012 as well.

What was once an incredibly litigious racing culture, with rates of inquiry even greater than those seen in California in 2017, has become one where the number of reviewed incidents and demotions have grown rare.

France and Germany, the last two European holdouts to Category 2, switched to Category 1 with the commencement of their 2018 flat seasons. Henri Pouret, Deputy Director General of Racing Operations for France Galop, in his remarks to the IFHA’s International Conference on October 8, 2018, noted that the number of stewards’ inquiries had dropped by one-third and the number of demotions declined by one-half through that point of the season, their first under Category 1.

At the same presentation, Dr Oscar Bertolletti, representing OSAF, the organization which oversees the industry in Central and South America, noted that Panama, the last remaining Latin American holdout in Category 2, has also made the shift as of September 2018.

23 The JRA data does not differentiate between a “reviewed incident,” as discussed in this paper, and an “inquiry.”
Great Britain, perhaps the closest international jurisdiction to North America, particularly given the rising participation at and distribution of the Royal Ascot meeting, and vice versa through the Breeders’ Cup and several other major racing events, has been a Category 1 stalwart.

Hong Kong, whose exposure in America has grown since allowing for commingling into their massive tote pools, also flies the Category 1 flag. Both experience miniscule demotion rates as a product of their rules philosophy. See their figures in the following chart, combined with Japan for 2017. The rates of review and demotions are significantly lower than what is experienced in North America.

Using the rate of reviewed incidents and demotions from Great Britain in 2017 (1.16% for RI, 0.19% for demotions), the subsequent chart shows a projection of North America reviewed incidents and demotions if the same rate was experienced, as well as those of NYRA and SoCal.

History of Stewarding Changes

It is easy to understand why North Americans use the term “disqualification” to refer to what is actually a “demotion” when looking at the racing rules of yesteryear.

There is precedent for North American jurisdictions to make changes to the way in which the race is adjudicated, taking into consideration a more even-handed approach to racing stakeholders. Prior to the mid-1950s, some jurisdictions in North America would demote a horse to last place, essentially a disqualification for any interference in a race, regardless of the horses impacted.

The rule change giving stewards the discretion to choose where a demoted horse would spread gradually across the continent. The following excerpt is from July 1934.

“The stewards of the Detroit Racing Association...announced that...they will make options with themselves the extent of disqualifications in races where a foul has been committed. This will give them the power instead of placing last a horse which finishes first, to place it second, if,
in their opinion, no other horse was interfered with.”

Steward Joseph Murphy offered comment on the rationale for the change. Note the underlined section.

“While a foul might be apparent to them [bettors, racing fans], they are rather mystified when two horses are far out in front of their field and one of them is placed behind every other horse in the race, although all but the contender might be soundly beaten. Very frankly, I have often wondered why this should be so myself.

The rule is not new. In the old days of racing in California, when judge Charles F. Price, E. C. Hopper and myself were the stewards, this rule was in vogue and continues so until the repeal of the old racing act there early in the century.

The claim that was made at the time, that it would be an inducement for a rider to take more chances, did not materialize and as I recall it, there was no more rough riding than there is at the present day. With the new rule, the stewards have announced that they will be more strict than ever with deliberate rough riders and will increase the punishment in all flagrant cases.”

The modernization spread across North America, but at a slow pace. The rule reached Louisiana for use in 1938, per this DRF extract.

“SHREVEPORT, La., Oct. 21 - It was announced by the stewards of the State Jockey Club today that the rule governing the disqualification of horses at the state fair grounds would be the same as that which is in vogue now at River Downs and has been in use at Thistle Down and Detroit.”

New York was among the last to adopt the change. DRF columnist Chuck Connors made the case in a 1952 piece.

“The disqualification rule in force in New York...came in for some criticism yesterday. The rank and file in the grandstand and along the lawns voiced their disapproval yesterday George D Widener's Platan, who finished first, was disqualified and placed last. The colt was a stoutly supported choice and, when the objection sign was flashed, the murmurs began to grow.

When the number came down the voices of those who wagered place and show – believe it or not, there are quite a number of this type – and the roars of disapproval were easily discernible. The New York rule is hard and fast and leaves the stewards with no alternative. However, in other sectors where racing is conducted, the ultimate placing of an offender who is disqualified is left to the stewards.”

More than 20 years after Detroit adopted the changing rules, New York fell in line, as reported by the DRF on April 19, 1956:

“Effective Friday, the stewards on the New York thoroughbred race tracks have the discretion to place disqualified horses as far back as they think justified by the offense. They will no longer automatically be placed out of the money, as has been the case...

With minor amendments, the changes in the rules met little opposition from the various factions. Curiously, the one objection to the revision of the foul rule came from an unidentified ‘horse player,’ who took the view that a foul was a foul was a foul and that no one should profit by it in any way.”

Just three days later, the stewards at Aqueduct had a chance to apply the new rule, and in a rather big spot – the Wood Memorial. Columnist Chuck Connors recounted the event.

“The stewards of this meeting...took the new disqualification rule, passed by the New York State Racing Commission, in full stride on Saturday. The race happened to be the Wood Memorial, but there was no hesitation when it came to reversing the original finish and Head Man was named the winner and Golf Ace placed second.

The three men are by no means strangers to this procedure for they all served in the stewards’ stand at Florida tracks, where the rule has been in force for some time. Some members of the paddock gang were more than interested in the first test of the new departure and wondered if, from force of habit, Golf Ace after the usual study of the Film Patrol, would be placed last.

However, their fears were short-lived; the stewards, acting under their judicial powers, decided that second was where he belonged.

The paddock gang, with a few exceptions, favors the new rule, and as far as could be learned, so are John and Jane Doe of the grandstand set. The clubhouse contingent as a rule is in favor of all new innovations, whether it is a rule or a new method of twisting lemon peel.”

While a change from Category 2 to Category 1 would present a seismic shift in the way in which the sport has been adjudicated on the continent, the concept of a significant overhaul to a major tenet of the rules is not without precedent.

Contemplating the Change

Any change in the rules of racing within a North American jurisdiction will require individual jurisdictions to amend their rules of racing. The topic was up for discussion at the University of Arizona’s 2017 Global Symposium on Racing.

The panel featured two current North American stewards, the California Horse Racing Board’s Scott Chaney and the Illinois Racing Board’s chief state steward Eddie Arroyo, as well as the Japan Racing Association’s Atsushi Koya.

Both Arroyo and Chaney offered positive opinions should North America switch to Category 1 at some point in the future, and easily identified the tradeoffs that stakeholders must accept regardless of the model. Select passages are bolded and underlined for emphasis.

Chaney: “When you switch to Category 1, make no mistake, you are sacrificing fairness and equity, and things like that, for certainty and consistency and ‘easier-to-understand.’

In the U.S., we used to have it where most jurisdictions used to be ‘a foul is a foul.’ That approach was, if you commit interference, you are disqualified. It creates a lot of certainty for the wagering public and for the jockeys. You are not going to commit interference with another horse, or else you are disqualified. But what it does sacrifice is equity, is fairness.

30 https://vimeo.com/248492656/1038b6374c

So we moved as a country to our current philosophy, which introduces a lot more judgment, a lot more subjectivity, in an effort to try and make the races and then their outcomes more fair, more just.

From a steward sitting in the stand, I like Category 1 because we don’t get any grief. Everyone kind of agrees what the result is going to be, it’s straightforward. [In Japan], out of 3,500 races, you change the result only maybe 5-10 times. As a steward, you take criticism, but I think it’s important to know you are giving up something [with either Category].”

Arroyo was introduced to the Category 1 philosophy at a 2015 conference and offered his remarks from that point.

“When they showed us Category 1 compared to Category 2, we had a quick grin and said ‘this will never fly.’ The topic wasn’t discussed much in the last year and we went to [another conference in 2017] and there was more discussion.

We began to look at the difference in the Categories and it became quite apparent that there is some merit to [Category 1].

We have a lot of interaction with the bettors, our phones ring when we disqualify [demote] a horse. They would rather that we do not interfere with the calls in the races. The majority feel the finish should stand and the stewards should not interfere.

But, after I returned from the meeting, when we had an inquiry and adjudicated the race, we then talked about how we would have handled the race if we were a Category 1 country. I will tell you, it made it so much simpler, we always would come to the same conclusion and we’d come to the conclusion fast. The benefit of Category 1, and I’m not 100% sold on it, everyone understands what the stewards are going to do when the incident happens. Under Category 2, you don’t know.

It simplifies what we do, but at the same time, if we all did it, and you know how hard it is in this country to get everyone to apply the same rule, we would be really consistent, not just in our state, but across the country. It needs some discussion, but I think it has a future.

With roughly five decades of experience in the stewards’ booth, Arroyo and Chaney addressed the main points in the debate between the Categories. Without question, Category 2 introduces much greater subjectivity in the hopes of a just and equitable result. Category 1 yields a philosophy that is more consistent and easy-to-understand.

On balance, we believe North American racing would benefit from the switch to Category 1.

Recalling the experience of the change in Japan, Atsushi Koya expressed that the JRA often had frequent complaints to their customer service division over steward decisions made under Category 2.

“After a few months following the switch, the number of calls we would receive were very few.”
Most striking, however, Koya’s summary to the full experience suggests the impact that the change from Category 2 to Category 1 had.

“This change was a true reform to make our racing better.”

France was a strong holdout, but finally switched to Category 1 following the IFHA’s adoption of a model rule that covered the topic. The reasons for retaining Category 2, as explained in this Racing Post article from October 2017 below, sounds quite similar to the cries that might be heard from North American naysayers to adopting Category 1.

“French resistance to observing interference rules that apply elsewhere... has crumbled in the face of a new clause to be introduced to the International Federation of Horseracing Authorities’ international agreement.

“France...so far remained in Category 2, with the French authorities citing their punters’ reliance on exotic bet types, rather than defending, for example, worthy winners.”

Arguments such as those which were routinely offered by the French fell by the wayside, and their adoption of Category 1, along with that of Germany, leaves North America as a global outlier remaining in Category 2. The positive comments from Stewards Arroyo and Chaney are encouraging in the quest to achieve a more consistent approach which values clarity over a more subjective philosophy.

Jack Wolf, founder of partnership Starlight Racing, a winner of no less than two dozen graded races, and a Thoroughbred Idea Foundation board member, offers his thoughts having experienced both sides of the current system as an owner.

“Safety is obviously paramount, but quite clearly from a consistency perspective, Category 1 must be adopted. My horses have been involved on both sides of victory and defeat through demotions in graded stakes, and in each case I felt bad when we were moved up and pretty upset when taken down. The best horse should be allowed to win the race.”

Dubai World Cup and Breeders’ Cup winning jockey Aaron Gryder supports a change.

“I’ve ridden all over the world in the last decade, with extended stops in Hong Kong and the Middle East and just about everywhere in North America. There is no doubt in my mind that the Category 1 philosophy I experienced overseas is much more straightforward for everyone involved in the race.”

Penalties with Category 1

We cannot overstate this: the safety of in-race participants – horses and jockeys – is of paramount concern no matter the rules philosophy in place.

Whether Category 1 or Category 2, racing cannot tolerate extreme or inappropriate riding tactics which jeopardize safety, making a sport in which human athletes are already trailed by an ambulance even more dangerous. Stewards must ensure that the jockeys licensed to ride in a jurisdiction are legitimately credentialed to do so and that new apprentices are skilled enough to not create excessive hazards to their colleagues.

When faced with the prospects of far fewer demotions, one is left to wonder if racing would suffer from an outbreak of fouls, or a win-at-all-cost mentality from jockeys, jeopardizing the safety of in-race participants.

Category 1 jurisdictions are not replete with carnage from racing where few horses are demoted due to interference. A penalty structure, which includes suspensions and monetary fines, serves as a deterrent for careless riding.

Despite demoting only 11 horses from 85 inquiries in the 17,268 races over five full years since shifting to Category 1 (2013-2017), the stewards of the Japan Racing Association delivered 199 suspensions to jockeys over the period. Monetary fines are also included in many Category 1 jurisdictions’ penalty structures, with both fines and suspension durations increasing with the number of repeated offenses for guilty jockeys.

Atsushi Koya, currently the senior manager, general affairs of the JRA’s Nakayama Racecourse, led Japan’s conversion to Category 1 in his previous role as a steward. He outlined the benchmarks used by Japan in their new Category 1 model.

“Usually, the starting point on the suspension is nine calendar days in the JRA. If [in] a graded race, like the Japan Cup, the number of suspension days should be increased to 16 calendar or 23 calendar days. We review the penalty record of the jockey when deciding the penalty for the interference. If there is a penalty record in the recent couple of months and the jockey interfered again, the suspension would be increased.”

Concerns of jockeys losing control and riding in a reckless manner are unfounded in any of these jurisdictions.

France, the world’s most recent adopter of Category 1, outlined their adjusted penalty structure when announcing the change.

“(A) dangerous riding offence will result in a minimum of 6 days suspension (8 days for apprentices and in Group races, up to 15 to 20 days in case of a fall). If the interference is not caused by dangerous riding but still causes demotion, the penalty shall be a 2 to 4 days suspension (150€ to 2 days if the finishing order isn’t affected).

“Director of racing at France Galop, Henri Pouret explained: ‘In the future, the challenge will also be to harmonize the interpretation of regulations between countries, on comparable cases. I think it will be more complicated to get sanctions harmonized. For example, we do not run with the same frequency in France [as] Japan. Therefore a suspension of the same duration does not have the same consequences.

We have been touring the whole country to introduce these new rules to all our stewards and they are very well received, since they do not appear as revolutionary. That should not be too much of a problem for the stewards. Finally, it should be noted that riders who go abroad are already used to this type of regulation.”

In Hong Kong, the base penalty for a jockey penalized for careless riding, without any factors for a good riding record, is two race meetings, which normally encompasses seven calendar days, as well as a fine of one-half of one day’s average earnings over the course of a Hong Kong season.

Under the Category 1 approach, the post-race penalty for interference in a race is limited almost solely to the jockey. The owner and trainer keep their share of the prize money, a winning bettor stays that way.

If a dangerous, “win-at-all-cost” approach was applied by a jockey in a particular race, the rules can be bolstered with a true disqualification clause – removing a horse from the race after it has been run as a function of an egregious foul. This is the non-American use of the term “disqualification,” and matches its use in other sports.

In the circumstance of a disqualification, all parties associated or supporting the disqualified horse lose – owner, trainer, jockey and the bettors. While its application is rare, its placement in the rules is designed as the harshest deterrent.

The IFHA adopted the disqualification element in its model rule, based in Category 1 philosophy, and is in place in many jurisdictions.

“A Racing Authorities may, within their Rules, provide for the disqualification of a horse from a race in circumstances in which the Staging Authority’s relevant judicial body deems that the rider has ridden in a dangerous manner.”

A switch to Category 1 should not yield more careless or dangerous riding. This has not been the case in the history of jurisdictions to make the change. The threat of the disqualification rule and an appropriate penalty structure for riding offenses does its job.

“Central Office” not Viable

If North America does not adopt a Category 1 philosophy, other changes should be implemented to improve the Category 2 experience for industry stakeholders.

It should be noted that, unlike many other professional sports, the power of the stewards often far outreach that of an umpire or referee – stewards can change the entire final outcome of the event, not just one play, critical though that one play may be.

One oft-cited item on a wish list of horseplayers or owners is the desire to have a “central office” where a main group of stewards adjudicates races. Pointing to the implemented “official review” systems in place in many professional sports, some racing stakeholders have suggested a uniform body of stewards could yield a more consistent experience in the adjudication of the race.

The comparison, however, is faulty.

The central replay structure in other sports relies first on a live, real-speed call by an official where the replay center is asked only to verify accuracy after the original decision. In horse racing, any adjudication required happens after the fact, with the benefits of replays. There is no “live” call required. No other professional sport has a centralized body making all calls, but rather serving as a supplementary check to the live call.

The concept of implementing a centralized review system also ignores the massive hurdle – the power of the stewards is vested by individual state or provincial bodies, not a national office. The states can change the rules (adopting Category 1 over Category 2), but ceding control is highly unlikely.

33https://www.ifhaonline.org/default.asp?section=Resources&story=992
While there is little doubt that a central body of stewards officiating all of the continent’s races would generate greater consistency, a Category 1 adoption would yield a significant decline in the number of reviewed incidents. Applying the 2017 rate in Great Britain to North America, the projected number of reviewed incidents would be roughly 1.33 per day, leaving the central office without much work.

As outlined earlier in this paper by stewards from other Category 1 jurisdictions, and even North American stewards opining on Category 1, the decision-making required by this philosophy is often straight-forward. Stakeholders know what to expect.

Additional Considerations

Enhancements to the race-day adjudication of the sport should not be limited to the rules of the race, alone. North American racing is replete with stewards’ panels which sit high above the racetrack.

We believe the sport would be improved with a higher degree of interaction between jockeys and stewards, particularly in the inquiry, and details of such interactions should be shared with the public.

In the footnotes, take a look at the Racing Incident Report, published several hours after each Hong Kong race day, which outlines the stewards’ observations on each race and the results of any questioning they’ve had of jockeys or trainers based on the races from that day. The granularity is key, showing the extreme respect for the stakeholders participating in the financial outcomes of the race.

Racing fans in North America often gawk longingly when overseas jurisdictions offer a glimpse into the work of the stewards on race day. Bondi Beach and Simple Verse exchanged bumps in the 2015 St Leger and the cameras captured the presentation of cases to the stewards. The link to watch the video via YouTube is in the footnotes.

Occasionally, such proceedings have been captured elsewhere. In North America, nearly all communication with a jockey regarding an incident is conducted via phone. In many overseas jurisdictions, stewards may watch a race from on high, but gather in a lower space and meet directly with jockeys, either for inquiries, to get a direct explanation regarding a horse’s performance, riding tactics or other related matters.

A more engaging, direct method of conducting an inquiry should be available. Racing would benefit from the confidence boost likely if, at least, some portions of the proceedings were recorded and broadcast, while robust explanations of decisions were offered in a timely fashion through official channels. We recognize that some jurisdictions are publishing decisions with rationale today.

Kentucky stewards published their rationale on the Keeneland website following the demotion of the original winner of the Grade 3 Dowager Stakes in October before the next race was run – with Keeneland even pushing this explanation through their social media channels. This is helpful, although the transparency can be extended.

Further, given the significant population of jockeys whose native language is Spanish, North American jurisdictions, and due process, would benefit from the presence of an interpreter to ensure a more complete understanding of a case. In nearly all overseas jurisdictions, jockeys (and occasionally trainers) involved in a reviewed incident face stewards directly as opposed to speaking solely by phone.

35 https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=diny3MgdMHY

As suggested earlier, no less than $2 million in purses and wagers changed hands in New York and SoCal from demotions made by stewards in 2017 alone. The continent-wide figure likely exceeds $10 million annually.

Ignoring for a moment the rules philosophy currently in place and discussed throughout much of this paper, North America lags far behind the rest of the world when it comes to transparency in race adjudication. The confidence of financially-involved participants – owners and horseplayers – should be a top concern. These types of improvements would increase stakeholder confidence and should be adopted where reasonable.

We would be remiss to not identify our awareness of the frustration that exists in some quarters over the penalty process in North American racing, chock full of appeals and jurisdictional nuance. While we don’t foresee this changing with a switch from Category 2 to Category 1, we believe that individual jurisdictions should take whatever steps are necessary to streamline processes while respecting stakeholders. To ensure safety, penalties must be both meaningful and executed in a timely fashion.

Implementing Category 1

The Thoroughbred Idea Foundation recognizes the challenges with adopting and implementing change in the sport. The challenge itself is not a reason change should be avoided. Change is needed.

The first major step to implementing a rules philosophy change would be an adoption of the IFHA-backed model rule. A full version of that rule can be found in the Appendix. Fortunately, the topic is on the agenda for discussion at the 2018 Model Rules Committee in Tucson this December. If a model rule is adopted by the committee, now or in the future, individual jurisdictions would be required to take their own steps to accept and adopt.

Commensurate with the model rules update, training would be required for North American racing officials. Already a function of the Racing Officials Accreditation Program (ROAP) which oversees the accreditation and continuing education of stewards, the infrastructure is in place to effect such change.

France approved the change to Category 1 in October 2017 and implemented the new rules on March 31, 2018. “We have lots of racecourses in France and lots of stewards,” said Henri Pouret at the IFHA International Conference in October 2018.

“500 of them had to be trained to apply the new rule, which is a lot of work to do. The position about the change was, overall, in favor of it. Not against. Some were in favor because they considered that it was easier, in a way, to apply the new rule.”

Mr Pouret explained the steps taken once France decided to adopt Category 1. First, he indicated, updated written guidelines were provided to the stewards, which came in concert with support from the trainers’ and jockeys’ associations, and a series of interactive seminars were held across the country supplemented with video case studies.

“The implementation of the change has been eased because the stewards in the provinces were supportive with the new guidelines as they consider that it is easier to let the result stand rather than demote a horse.”
Communication to horseplayers is equally essential, requiring support from racetrack broadcast entities, national broadcasters, journalists, social influencers and key bettors. In North America, even advanced deposit wagering (ADW) outlets should be involved in sharing news of the change.

While a long-time Category 1 jurisdiction, the Hong Kong Jockey Club published a tutorial video for racegoers to enhance understanding of key race-day decisions from stewards using various examples, including both sustained and dismissed claims of foul. The videos are in Chinese with English subtitles and can be accessed at the link in the footnote.36

Japan published leaflets for distribution on-track, videos featuring stewards and numerous website notices to alert racing fans of the adjustment. Videos featuring JRA stewards were produced to supplement racing fans’ awareness.

Changing the Rules

Adopting Category 1 would be a significant change to the ecosystem of North American racing. Let’s tackle some of the main questions associated with this topic, as have been discussed throughout this paper.

1. Is it possible for a jurisdiction with a long history and a large stakeholder base to transition from Category 2 to Category 1?

Yes. France adopted the change in October 2017 after years of discussion and implemented the new rules six months later. Japan implemented Category 1 a little more than two years after a classic Category 2 demotion was made in their richest international race, the Japan Cup.

2. Will Category 1 yield a more consistent approach when it comes to considering whether to review an incident, or once an incident is already under review?

Yes. The application of a subjective approach by the stewards is greatly reduced in Category 1. The result is a more consistent set of rulings. Even long-time American stewards that have learned about Category 1 interference rules agree.

3. If Category 1 is adopted, will the stewards still be called-upon in instances of very close finishes where some interference may have occurred?

Yes. This is universal regardless of the Category. There is still some element of interpretation required, but on a far less frequent basis under Category 1.

4. How much fairer is Category 1 than 2?

There is no perfect solution. Interference in a race cannot be adjudicated to the point that a single solution will yield an entirely fair result. The point made by California-based steward Scott Chaney, referenced earlier, is the standard when it comes to this topic: Category 1 sacrifices equity in exchange for clarity and consistency. Category 2 does the opposite. We believe there is tremendous value in adopting a philosophy which emphasizes clarity and consistency for stakeholders – prime values to bolster market confidence.

On balance, we believe North America should adopt Category 1, beginning with the Model Rules Committee and then going forward with individual jurisdictional adoption. This would be a significant improvement and confidence boost for the financial drivers of the sport – horseplayers and owners.

Appendix

International Federation of Horseracing Authorities
Model Rule on Interference

IFHA - October 3, 2017

If, in the opinion of the Staging Authority’s relevant judicial body, a horse or its rider causes interference and finishes in front of the horse interfered with but irrespective of the incident(s) the sufferer would not have finished ahead of the horse causing the interference, the judge’s placings will remain unaltered.

If, in the opinion of the Staging Authority’s relevant judicial body, a horse or its rider causes interference and finishes in front of the horse interfered with and if not for the incident(s) the sufferer would have finished ahead of the horse causing the interference, the interferer will be placed immediately behind the sufferer.

Racing Authorities may, with their Rules, provide for the disqualification of a horse from a race in circumstances in which the Staging Authority’s relevant judicial body deems that the rider has ridden in a dangerous manner.
