

By collecting articles week-by-week, and talking about the connections between and among different news/analysis items, we found ourselves becoming really news literate, capable of more than off the cuff comments about things we previously weren't following closely and/or about which we had no background knowledge. Muckrakers, Vancouver morphed into the news department of Co-op Radio, and supported the work of several professional journalists.