

IMMEDIATE OPENINGS

Postdoctoral Research Fellowship in “Behavioral Sciences Research in HIV Infection,” at the HIV Center for Clinical and Behavioral Studies, Division of Gender, Sexuality, and Health in the Columbia University Department of Psychiatry.

This postdoctoral Fellowship Program provides innovative training in sexuality, gender, and mental health research as applied to HIV prevention and treatment across populations in both national and global contexts. The program is open to persons with an doctoral degree in the behavioral, social or medical sciences. The long-term goal of the Program is to develop a diverse and highly skilled workforce of leaders in behavioral and social science research to meet the challenges posed by the evolving HIV/AIDS epidemic.

Our Program employs three complementary and mutually reinforcing learning strategies:

- (1) Involvement in research mentored by experienced senior investigators;
- (2) Education via multiple modalities in substantive issues, including the intersection of sexuality, gender, and mental health with fundamentals of medicine, epidemiology, biostatistics, and health promotion related to HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment, and care; and
- (3) Training in critical academic and professional skills that will enable our graduate postdoctoral Fellows to excel as competitive researchers with extramural grant support from NIH as well as other PHS and private funders.

This Fellowship offers extensive opportunities for networking with researchers, clinicians, and public health practitioners across disciplines and a range of academic and public health centers in the New York metropolitan area. Fellows have full access to resources of the HIV Center and the Columbia University Medical Center.

Applications are invited now for four full-time two- to three-year fellowship position. Two positions will be filled immediately once appropriate candidates have been identified. The two other positions will be filled in the summer of 2017.

To begin the application process, download the application form at the following website:

<http://gendersexualityhealth.org/training/nrsa.html>. Complete the application form and submit with a current Curriculum Vita by email to postdoc@nyspi.columbia.edu. Further information about the program will be emailed to all eligible applicants, along with instructions for completing the application process (including submission of letters of recommendation). This search is open immediately and will continue until position is filled.

This is an NIMH-funded postdoctoral training program. You can learn more about the program by visiting <http://gendersexualityhealth.org/training/nrsa.html>. Trainees receive support for stipends, health insurance, travel to conferences, and research.