Robert has 40 plus years' experience as a professor, field researcher, consultant, and conservation scientist in Africa, Europe, Asia and Latin America. In his photography Robert tries to focus on using his work to highlight what the National Geographic Society defines as geotourism, which incorporates the concept of sustainable tourism—that destinations should remain unspoiled for future generations—while allowing for ways to protect a place's character. In 2010 he took time-off to travel across America and to build a house in Rockville, Utah near Zion National Park where he serves on the Planning Commission and continues consulting, teaching and photography.

Deann's inspiration is drawn from all the amazing wonders and the incredible beauty of this world. Her heart pounds and her eyes are astounded as she truly enjoys all that the earth provides. She looks for beauty around every corner, in the pose of a person, the sway of a tree, the colors of nature, someone's eyes, the innocence of a child and all of the many nuances of color and form. Painting as well as studying art is her passion. She loves to study great works of art at every opportunity. Sharing this passion with others makes life more enjoyable for her. She is also a winner of numerous Best of Show and Blue Ribbons. "So many paintings and so little time!"
