As emerging adults, most college students are at an important developmental stage, still benefiting from family support and wisdom while also strengthening their own independence. The current climate of heightened anti-Israel and antisemitic rhetoric on many campuses may be especially challenging to navigate.

With the fall semester underway, and with the memories of last spring semester still fresh in our minds, parents, guardians and loved ones of college students are welcome to join a community conversation and learning with Adena Kirstein, Executive Director at George Washington University Hillel and Rabbi Rachel Hersh, JSSA Director of Jewish Engagement on how we can best support our own college-age kids.

Adena Kirstein is the recent author of "Centering Jewish Identity Development (Even) When There Is Antisemitism On Campus" in the journal Sources.
