Ron Bruehlman is a senior finance leader with 34 years of experience with both public and private companies in the industrial, healthcare services, and petroleum industries.

Ron served as Chief Financial Officer of IMS Health from July 2011 through September 2016. In this capacity, he was responsible for the controllers, FP&A, treasury, tax, internal audit, corporate development, and professional services procurement functions. He joined IMS Health following the 2010 leveraged buyout led by TPG Capital and subsequently guided the company through its 2014 IPO and its $16 billion merger of equals with Quintiles Transnational Corporation in October, 2016. During his tenure, the private equity sponsors earned a 3.2x multiple of their investment. Ron is currently acting as Senior Advisor to the CEO of IQVIA, the merged company.

Prior to joining IMS Health, Ron had a 23-year career at United Technologies Corporation (UTC), where he held multiple senior finance leadership roles of increasing responsibility. These included running UTC's global corporate development and strategy group, serving as Chief Financial Officer of Carrier Corporation, leading the corporate financial planning and analysis function for UTC, serving as Chief Financial Officer of Carrier's EMEA operations in Paris, running financial analysis and planning for Otis Elevator, and leading UTC's investor relations function.

Ron began his career as a financial analyst at Conoco, Inc. (now ConocoPhillips).

Ron currently serves as Chairman of the Board of Q-Squared Solutions, a joint venture between IQVIA and Quest Diagnostics that provides laboratory services for clinical trials. In 2010, he served as Audit Committee Chairman for Clipper Windpower, a publicly traded company owned 49% by UTC. Ron also served for eleven years on the board of the Connecticut Forum and five years on the board of the New England Air Museum.

Ron earned a B.S. in economics from the University of Delaware, as well as an MBA in finance from the University of Chicago, Booth School of Business.

Ron is married with three adult children and lives in Ridgefield, Connecticut.
