Living an Undivided Life

Many of us know from personal experience how it feels to live a divided life. Inwardly, we experience one imperative for our lives, but outwardly we respond to quite another. This is our human condition – our inner and our outer worlds are never in perfect harmony. The claims the institutions make on us where we live or work are sometimes at odds with our hearts. The divided life is a wounded life, and the soul keeps calling us to heal the wound. We ignore that call at great peril.
